Soviets Report Foe Held In New, Violent Battles; 200 Planes Raid Moscow

Few Get Through Defenses of Capital; Still Splitting Up Reds, Nazis Say

(Detailed Accounts, Pages 3 and 4.)

By the Associated Press

The Germans claimed today their troops steadily were surrounding and destroying important blocks of the huge Soviet Red army, but the Russians merely reported heavy fighting still raged in the key areas guarding the roadways to Leningrad, Moscow and Kiev.

A Russian communique issued early today named the battle areas as Nevel, Smolensk, Novograd-Volynski and Polotsk, and said a Nazi air attack on Leningrad had been beaten off. Soviet fighters were declared to have shot down 11 Nazi planes in the first attempted attack on Leningrad and 10 German planes in the second foray.

In New York, the Columbia Broadcasting System credited to the British wireless early today a report that the Moscow radio had announced that more than 200 German planes had attempted to raid Moscow.

The report said isolated planes reached the city, starting a few fires and killing or injuring a number of persons.

Seventeen of the invaders were reported downed.

Moscow was reported held under alarm for five and one-half hours.

Report Stalin's Son Taken

An authorized spokesman in Berlin jubilantly claimed the capture of Jacob Stalin, officer-son of Josef Stalin, Russian premier and Red army commander in chief. He said the younger Stalin was taken in fighting between Vitebsk and Smolensk on the road to Moscow.

The German news agency D. N. B. said German planes inflicted severe losses on Russian troops concentrated in the Shimsk-Novgorod sector, 100 miles south of Leningrad, and had successfully raided Red air bases up and down the long front.

German high command report that there was a specific advance by German - Rumanian - Hungarian forces on the Ukraine front in the south was offset by a Budapest radio announcement that heavy rains had held up Hungarian troops.

The picture left by Moscow was of violent fighting in relatively static and familiar battle areas with the Russians generally holding their long-assaulted positions and able to claim that one of their greatest allies, time, was taking a more important position.

The Soviet command's day communique simply reported a continuation of heavy action in the Polotsk-Nevel-Smolensk salient before Moscow and in the Novograd Volynski area fronting Kiev in the Ukraine. Elsewhere—and this included the approaches to Leningrad—it was declared that up to Monday afternoon there had been no late significant action.

Unofficially, the Russians asserted that Smolensk, the strategic city at the Red center only 230 miles short of Moscow, still was in their hands, thus disputing last week's German announcements that it had been captured and overrun and inferentially claiming that the main Nazi thrust had made no real progress in several days.

Attack on Soldier, Girl Confessed

'Old-Fashioned' Police Work Solves Crime Mystery Speedily

A 19-year-old youth who had been in the Capital less than a week last night admitted criminally attacking a Washington girl, 18, and beating and slashing her soldier escort last Saturday night. Police had his signed confession within 36 hours after he had committed the crime.

BEACH

SLATTERY

This confession ended a day of questioning by detectives, and brought to brilliant climax an arrest that resulted from remarkable work on the part of the "policeman on the beat."

Directly responsible for bringing the man to a quick accounting for his assault in Patterson Wood Hill in the 600 block of New York Avenue Northeast, were two privates of the Twelfth Precinct—Daniel Slattery and James G. Beach.

Slattery first saw the man, a big, solid-muscled Negro, on the street last Friday. The policeman, cruising in a scout car, spotted the man as a stranger on his beat. So he stopped his car, got out and began talking to the man. He wanted to know who the fellow was, where he came from, what he was doing.

"He told me he had come up from North Carolina on Thursday. He had a job with a bottling concern on New York Avenue," reported Slattery. When he was through with the interview the policemen made notes on the man's appearance. There was no special reason for suspecting the man, but Slattery wanted to make certain he had a clear impression of the fellow.

That was probably the last Slattery thought of the incident until Saturday night when Detective Sergeant E. E. Scott, questioning the victim of a criminal attack in Patterson Wood, obtained from her a

Civic Leaders Praise Choice Of Mason for Commissioner

Lawyer and Former Newsman Is Named As Commissioner

The nomination of Guy Mason, lawyer and former newspaperman, to be District Commissioner, last night found wide favor among municipal authorities and civic leaders. His confirmation by the Senate is expected Thursday.

Both groups also were high in their praise of President Roosevelt's speedy action in filling the vital city post made vacant last week by the death of Melvin C. Hazen.

Swift steps to obtain Senate confirmation of the nomination were promised by Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee.

He named a special subcommittee to study the appointment. It consists of Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman; Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, and Senator Burton (Republican), of Ohio.

Senator Tydings said he was well acquainted with Mason and described him as "a fine man who will make a splendid Commissioner."

The subcommittee, said Tydings, will meet at 10 a. m. Thursday and transmit its confirmation report to the Senate when it convenes at noon.

"I am duty bound to wait a few days," said Tydings. "Although I am positive there will be no opposition, we must give consideration to anyone who may feel otherwise."

Both Overton and Burton said they did not know Mason, but had heard "nothing but excellent reports."

GUY MASON

Mason, a native of Indiana, will be 61 September 10. He has lived in Washington 37 years and at one time was a reporter on The Washington Post.

Although a practicing attorney here since 1917, the new Commissioner-select is not new to public office. He is at present appeal agent for local Selective Board No. 1 and during the Administration of President Wilson served as a member

Lieut. Stalin, Son of Premier, Taken in Battle, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin (Tuesday), July 22.—Authorized sources claimed today that Joseph Stalin's oldest son, Jacob, had been taken prisoner by the Germans.

He was captured July 16 near Ljosno (Liozno), Russia, with a number of other officers and soldiers taken by German panzer forces, the sources said.

Ljosno is between Vitebsk and Smolensk on the Moscow front.

Jacob Stalin was said to have been born March 18, 1908, at Baku, the son of Stalin's first wife. Jacob formerly was an engineer, but decided later to become an officer. He went through artillery academy in Moscow in two and one-half instead of five years, and held the rank of first lieutenant in the Fourteenth Howitzer Artillery Regiment of the Fourteenth Soviet Panzer Division when taken prisoner, German authorities said.

It was stated that Jacob identified himself beyond question of doubt as the son of the Russian leader.

He was also said to have expressed himself as having realized the foolishness of further resistance against the German forces confronting him and for this reason to have surrendered together with the soldiers under his command who were still alive.

It was announced that the German press would soon publish a picture of Stalin's son in new surroundings.

Jacob Stalin's mother was divorced by the Soviet premier. In 1919 he married Madya Alilueva, 17-year-old Georgian girl, who bore him a boy and a girl. She died November 9, 1932.

Key Witness In D. C. Nazi Trial Slain

Colombian Political Leader Was to Tell Of Infiltration In South America

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

The key witness who was to expose the Nazi organization in South America was murdered in Colombia the night before he intended to leave by plane to tell his story from the witness stand in the District Court here.

The slain man, Arturo Regueros Peralta, Colombian Congressman and former president of the House, had agreed to fly to Washington to testify against the German news service, Transocean, which is now on trial for failing to register as a propaganda agency.

Shot in the Back

From Bogota, the Colombian capital, The Post learned through confidential channels, that Regueros Peralta had a final conference with an American official about his testimony on June 30. He then arranged to catch a plane for Washington on July 4.

About 7 p. m. the night of July 3, Regueros Peralta left his home in Bucaramanga, second city of Colombia, for the offices of his newspaper, El Comunero. As he drew near the office he was shot twice in the back and died immediately.

Although Regueros Peralta was killed by two bullets fired from behind, and his own .38-caliber revolver was not fired, the openly pro-Nazi section of the Colombia press reported that his death was a suicide which was "clothed in impenetrable mystery."

Leader of Anti-Nazis

The slain Congressman was a leader of the anti-Nazi party throughout a brilliant career, fighting German infiltration both in his public capacity and in violent editorials in El Comunero. Educated as an engineer, he believed that the brightest future of his country was to be built upon development with American aid. He was the author of "Luz y Fuerza" (Light and Power), the draft of a law which would launch a Colombian power development roughly comparable to the TVA.

Special Assistant Attorney General George A. McNulty and his staff of prosecutors, in opening the Transocean prosecution before the District Court jury, outlined a vast propaganda web which covered the United States and stretched threads deep into the South American republics. As a publisher, Regueros Peralta had first-hand knowledge of these operations.

The Post learned that at one time, believing that Transocean was a reputable, though cheap, source of American news, Regueros Peralta used Transocean dispatches in El Comunero. Later he became suspicious and stopped the service. Then he was offered a special rate, finally was offered subsidies of cash and newsprint discounts if he would only continue to present the Nazi agency's version of United States

Rommel Reported Rushed to Spur Nazis in Russia

Copyright by New York Times

New York, July 21.—Private advices received tonight by the New York Times from a European capital reported that Gen. Erwin Rommel, commander of the German African Corps, had been recalled from Libya to collaborate with Gen. Field Marshal Siegmund List in mapping the Russian campaign.

According to these reports, which were attributed to a neutral diplomat, Gen. Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the supreme command of the German army, and Gen. Field Marshal Walther von Brauchitsch, commander in chief of the German armies, have been relegated to the background because of the poor progress made in Russia.

These reports followed a Moscow radio broadcast, recorded here Sunday night by the Columbia Broadcasting System's short-wave listening station, to the effect that several generals, including Gen. Field Marshal List, "were surrounded by Himmler agents, who were to supervise the activities of these generals." "Some generals," the broadcast added, "were removed from their posts" and a "number of high officers of the German army have committed suicide."

All Is Forgiven! Gen. Lear Praises Yoo-Hoo Troops

Camp Robinson, Ark., July 21 (AP).—Apparently all has been forgiven by Lieut. Gen. Ben Lear who disciplined the "Yoo Hoo" battalion of the 110th Quartermaster Regiment two weeks ago for yelling at shorts-clad girls on a golf course.

The Second Army commander inspected the regiment today and described it as "the best supply regiment in the Second Army."

"I feel greatly indebted to your colonel (Col. Marcus L. Poteete) for doing a fine job," he told the regiment's noncommissioned officers later. "It isn't often that I praise an officer to his men."

Newsmen were first stopped at an entrance to Wright Field, where the inspection was held. The order was revoked, however, and the general permitted the newsmen to accompany him on his inspection rounds.

Gen. Lear made no mention of the "Yoo Hoo" incident.

Senate Passes Property Draft; Roosevelt Urges Retention Of Selects, Calling Peril Grave

Danger Increased Over Last Year's, He Says, Leaving Action to Congress

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday warned the Nation that it is in "infinitely greater" danger than a year ago and called upon Congress to declare a national emergency to keep selectees, Reservists and National Guardsmen in uniform indefinitely.

His demand set off heated debate on the Senate floor, and caused ranks to tighten on the controversial issue. Administration supporters backed up his demand that the Army be maintained intact, while opponents denied the emergency was greater than a year ago, and contended that retention of the troops would be a "breach of faith."

The President did not mince words in putting the question squarely before Congress. His formal message cited Germany's series of conquests as a dangerous threat to the United States and declared that failure to retain the troops would be a "tragic error" and a "grave national risk."

Broadcast To Nation

Stressing that "time counts," Mr. Roosevelt said that if the legislators did not act, demobilization of two-thirds of the Army would begin this fall. It would "melt away," he stated.

The President's blunt words, though addressed to Congress, were directed at the whole Nation. For after the Senate and House clerks began reading the message, recordings of it from Mr. Rosevelt's own lips were broadcast to the country.

Administration leaders on Capitol Hill pushed forward plans for speedy action of the legislation as the message was read. Members opposed to the proposal called for a bill of particulars as to how the Nation was endangered and concentrated their fire on the contention that retention of the citizen-soldiers would be "breaking faith" with them.

Van Nuys Charges Promise

Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, declared that the men were "specifically promised" that they would serve only a year, and asked what they would think of a Government that "won't keep its promises."

"A Government like that isn't worth fighting for," he added.

This view was attacked by other members. Representative Faddis (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, pointed out that the Selective Service Act provides that the term of service should be one year "unless the Congress decided that the interest and safety of the Nation were imperiled." The emergency, he added, "undoubtedly has become more

And as for Franco—

Welles Says Nazis Are Plotting New Aggressions in Europe

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

The United States has evidence that Germany plans to attack other free nations of Europe, Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, declared yesterday, indicating by a blistering attack upon Spain's Premier Franco that the Nazis may strike next in the Iberian Peninsula.

Welles refused details of his information about Nazi plans. He merely said that he has evidence of German plans to attack remaining independent countries in Europe. The conclusion was drawn immediately, however, that Welles looks for a Nazi coup against Spain or Portugal and their island possessions.

He coupled with this grim warning an accusation that Gen. Franco has been used as a tool by the Nazis to spread discord among the republics of the Western Hemisphere.

Welles told a press conference that an editorial in yesterday's Washington Post, which charged Franco with carrying on propaganda against the United States in Latin America in Berlin's behalf, best expressed his reaction to a recent speech by the Spanish dictator.

While Welles voiced these charges, the United States made these other moves to combat the Axis offensive below the Rio Grande:

Welles promised the full support of the United States to the Bolivian government in case there are any international complications from the efforts of Bolivia to eject the German minister at La Paz, who is charged with complicity in a Nazi plot to over-

Justice Department Studying Cases for Deportation or Prison

By James G. Simonds

The American Government, it was learned tonight, is preparing action against 45 members of the staffs of the German and Italian consulates and commercial agencies in the United States who refused to return to their countries when they were ordered to leave on the Navy transport West Point last Wednesday.

Government officials admitted for the first time that not all those ordered to go had left on the transport. For various reasons 20 Germans and 25 Italians had chosen to remain in the United States and risk deportation or imprisonment than to return to Germany and Italy.

It appeared that these consular staff members had violated the instructions of the German and Italian embassies in Washington, which had given them strict orders to be in New York in time to board the West Point.

FBI to Make Inquiry

The State Department is making a list of those who did not catch the boat, and it will be turned over to the Department of Justice. Officials indicated last night that Federal Bureau of Investigation agents probably would be called on to discover the reasons which each of these Germans and Italians might have for desiring to remain. This information will be used as the basis for deciding whether deportation proceedings or other measures should be taken against them.

Until the investigations have been completed, officials indicated that it would be very difficult to decide just what action could be taken, and it was evident that in some cases very

House Group Insists on Joint Tax Returns

Ways Committee Refuses to Delete Provision From Bill

The House Ways and Means Committee refused yesterday to delete from its $3,500,000,000 tax bill a provision requiring husbands and wives to file joint income tax returns.

A motion to reconsider the provision was sponsored by Representative Buck (Democrat), of California. The vote was not publicly announced, but one quarter said it was 15 to 10.

Joint returns, estimated to yield approximately $205,000,000 in additional revenue, were originally included in the bill by a 15-to-9 vote.

A movement to reverse the action, stemming mainly from nine community property States, was expected to continue on the floor of the House and in the Senate.

Chairman Doughton estimated that about 158,000 families would be affected, but denied that couples having a combined income of $4,000 or less would be affected by the change. Childless couples making $5,000 would have to pay $33 more and the increase would continue to be light until the $8,000 bracket was reached, he said.

Protests that the requirement would penalize marriage and encourage divorce were overruled by the committee, and at the Treasury Secretary Morgenthau said: "When a man's wedded life depends on his tax return, it hangs on a pretty slim thread."

In rejecting the move for reconsideration, the committee paved the way for clamping a lid on the tax measure virtually in the form it now is.

President Roosevelt's request that the committee revise the bill in line with the Treasury's invested capital excess profits tax plan was still before the group, but in this case also the committee is expected to stand on its own bill with its "optional"

Measure Restricts Power of Seizure To Arms or Goods Needed for Defense

(Text of President's Message, Page 9.)

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Legislation empowering the President to take over private property for defense yesterday was approved by an overwhelming voice vote of the Senate.

Passage followed a sharp isolationist clash with Administration forces, but the bill was sent to the House without major amendment.

Limitations previously approved in committee restricted requisition power to military and naval equipment, supplies and munitions or machinery and materials needed for their manufacture.

The original bill had specified "any property." The modification enabled the bill to speed through the Senate in a day. As opposition faded an angry debate opened on the Administration's unrelated Selective Service extension proposals.

Senator Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky, managing the property bill, exchanged verbal punches with Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, after Wheeler said Chandler "wants to go to war tomorrow."

Smith Questions Menace

Senate Majority Leader Barkley said that "if war is a last resort, I will not shun it," when Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, demanded, "What is this menace?"

Noninterventionists, declaring themselves largely satisfied with committee changes in the property bill, turned their fire on retention of selectees beyond a year, and debate strayed repeatedly to that issue.

As approved by the Senate, the requisition legislation empowers the President to take property on payment of a fair price when the need "is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply."

Another condition requires that all other means of obtaining such property for defense must first be exhausted.

Power to requisition private equipment for defense was limited to June 30, 1943, and the property could be sold back to the original owner whenever the President determines it is no longer needed for defense. At least every six months, the President would report to Congress.

"Anything Necessary"

Chandler declined to be pinned down by Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, on specific property that could be taken or powers implied in the bill.

"They have said that with this bill they can do anything necessary for defense," Chandler said. "The language speaks for itself."

But he denied it carried price-fixing authority and persuaded Taft to withdraw an amendment barring price control under requisitioning powers. Chandler told Taft the bill did not contemplate taking over the acute."

Legislation to continue the troops in service was introduced in both Houses of Congress. Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee, introduced two resolutions which would carry out the President's objectives but would not declare a national emergency.

"Limited" Emergency

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, ranking majority member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, submitted legislation which would declare an emergency to exist but limit it to the retention of the men. It would not invoke other wartime powers and would permit the citizen-soldiers to be sent outside the Western Hemisphere only with their consent.

Such a declaration of a "limited" emergency is considered the most likely form that the legislation ultimately will take. The President, in his message, did not insist on the declaration of a full emergency, a step that many would view as virtually a declaration of war.

"I am not asking the Congress for specific language in a specific bill" he stated. "But I can say frankly that I hope the Congress will acknowledge this national emergency either for a specific period or until revocation by the Congress or the President."

Schemes Held Evident

The objective, he added, is the "all important issue." This is to authorize continuing the troops in service "with understanding that, should the exigencies of the situation permit, early return to civil pursuits will follow in due course."

The President took issue with those who declare that the Americas cannot be attacked from without.

"It is," he said, "the well-nigh unanimous opinion of those who are daily cognizant, as military and naval officers and as Government servants in the field of international relations, that schemes and plans of aggressor nations against American security are so evident that the United States and the rest of the Americas are definitely imperiled in their national interests."

"Each elimination of a victim," the President said, "has brought the issue of Nazi domination closer to this hemisphere, while month by month their intrigues of propaganda and conspiracy have sought to weaken every link in the community of interests that should bind the Americas into a great western family."

Mr. Roosevelt reminded the legislators that the Nation had promised to protect the other nations of the Western Hemisphere against attack from wihout. To weaken our Army at this particular time, he declared, would be "an act of bad faith toward our neighbors."

Would End Limit on Number

His message also asked that Congress remove the present 900,000 limit on the number of selectees inducted each year. Such action is necessary, he said, "because of the swiftness of modern events."

The President said that Congress should ask employers to continue to keep open the jobs of men called into the Army. He promised to release officers and men from active duty whose retention on active duty would "impose undue hardship."

Hearings on the proposal continued yesterday before the Senate Military Affairs Committee. Grenville Clark, chairman of the national emergency committee of the Military Training Camps Association, presented a brief in support of the bill which declared that failure to keep the troops in service would demonstrate to the world that "the democratic system had broken down in a crisis."

The committee will hear opponents of the proposal this morning. Hearings are expected to wind up Thursday, and Senate leaders hope to start floor consideration Monday. Committee approval of the legislation is assured.

Not Fair, Says Norris

On and off the floor, the President's message was both attacked and defended.

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, felt "it wasn't fair to call the men into service for a year and then keep them longer." Representative Tinkham (Republican), of Massachusetts, stressed the same thought.

Senate galleries applauded frequent thrusts of two leading anti-interventionists, Senators Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, and Brooks (Republican), of Illinois, at the proposal. Support for the plan came from Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, who declared he was for it "for the reasons stated by the President."

Two Senators—Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, and Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, demanded an explanation of an Army order dated June 21, which they said was aimed at discouraging 3-year enlistments so that a large reserve of selectees could be established.

(The War Department on July 1 announced that men would not be reenlisted for 3-year terms unless they had demonstrated they were noncom or specialist material, and declared that the object of the order was to build a large reserve of trained men.)

Clerk Bill Introduced

A bill to give the District Court clerk power to appoint deputies and other "necessary employes" was introduced yesterday by Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee.

Thomas M. Wilson, of Tennessee, was nominated by President Roosevelt yesterday to be commissioner to India with the rank of minister.

Wilson, a veteran foreign service officer, becomes the first United States diplomatic representative in India.

India also will send a diplomatic representative to the United States, Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai, a member of the executive council of the governor general. He has been designated agent general for India.

Wilson, 60, and a native of Memphis, is now consul general at Calcutta, India. He was a consul at Bombay from 1922 to 1927.

Wilson, who was a captain overseas during the World War, entered the Foreign Service in 1919, serving at various posts in China and at Sydney, Australia.

The United States already has direct diplomatic relations with Canada, Australia and South Africa, and it is expected diplomatic representatives will be exchanged soon with New Zealand.

Only two major amendments proposed were put forward by Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, strong exponent of the President's foreign course, and both were rejected viva voce.

First of the Austin amendments defeated would have refused authority for the President in peacetime to make such use of the seizure power as would force a private business, from lack of tools, to close down. The second rejected amendment would have required the Government to buy a plant if it was forced by requisitioning of its machinery or materials to close.

The House Military Affairs Committee, which sidetracked the bill when it was originally introduced in more sweeping terms, will call up the modified Senate version today and early House action was forecast.

Senate debate veered to selectee training when Chandler said it was dangerous to longer withhold requisitioning powers from the President, then warned against releasing selectees after only one year of training. He said it was ridiculous to train an Army and then send it home in a graver emergency. Smith, Wheeler and Noninterventionist Senator Brooks (Republican), Illinois, joined in a stormy attack on service extension. The chair twice admonished the galleries to preserve order.

Smith earlier asked that the Senate be told "what is this terrible thing that is threatening us," and Chandler referred him to the message of the President and testimony of Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff. Barkley interposed that there were dangers that could not be publicly discussed. "The Senator talks as though we were in war," said Smith.

"No," said Barkley, "but if we are to face war, I want to be prepared. I voted for one war, and I hope to God Almighty that I won't have to vote for another one. But if war is a last resort, I will not shun it."

Army Shifts 17 Generals To New Posts

The War Department yesterday assigned 17 brigadier generals to new posts in its drive to place younger and more vigorous officers in key troop commands.

In the third shift of ranking generals within a week, Brig. Gen. Charles H. White, now in charge of the infantry replacement training center, Camp Roberts, Calif., was named commander of the Seventh Infantry Division, Fort Ord, Calif., and several important air force jobs changed hands.

Brig. Gen. Follett Bradley, now in Puerto Rico, was assigned to command the Third Bombardment Wing at MacDill Field, Fla. The present commander of the wing, Brig. Gen. Clarence L. Tinker, was sent to the Panama Canal Department for duty. Brig. Gen. Edwin B. Lyon, now at Moffett Field, Calif., was also ordered to Panama.

Many of those figuring in yesterday's shifts were newly promoted to general officer rank. Brig. Gen. Eugene W. Fales, now executive officer in the office of the chief of infantry here, was given Gen. White's post at Camp Roberts. Brig. Gen. Harold R. Bull was transferred from Culver Military Academy to the Fourth Motorized Division at Fort Benning, Ga., and Brig. Gen. Douglas B. Netherwood, now in Panama, was ordered to San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Other brigadier generals transferred in the shift include:

Charles H. Gerhardt, now at General Headquarters, Army War College here, was assigned to the First Cavalry Division, Fort Bliss, Tex.

Jonathan W. Anderson, now a member of the War Department general staff, was assigned to the Third Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash.

Course Opened To Teach Britain About America

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, July 21.—Opening a special course of instruction on the United States for 275 British teachers, American Ambassador John G. Winant today told the teachers that he hoped they would soon teach as much about America in Britain as is taught about Britain in American schools.

Thus far few British school children have learned much about the United States in their classes.

The Ambassador said he was sure that instruction in Britain on American history, literature and political trends would enable both Britain and the United States to tighten their present bonds of friendship.

Army Changes Helmet, Orders 2,000 Tanks

More than 2,000 medium and light tanks were ordered yesterday by the War Department as part of an undertaking to multiply the output of fighting vehicles for the Army and Great Britain.

At the same time, the first mass order was placed for some 900,000 new style steel helmets which the Army decided to adopt after exhaustive field tests.

Resembling helmets worn by German soldiers, the new headpieces were designed to give greater protection against bullets and shell fragments. They will subsitute for the flat type helmets worn during and since the World War.

Approximately 1,600 medium tanks of 28 tons were represented by contracts totaling $74,567,761 awarded the Chrysler Corporation, which has just started producing the heavily armed vehicle at the Army's new tank factory at Detroit. Officials said the contract was the largest such single order on record.

Orders for more than 900 additional 13-ton light tanks, armor and parts were given the American Car & Foundry Co., Berwick, Pa., which already is turning out these vehicles at the rate of 150 a month. Delivery dates on the new orders were not disclosed.

The tanks were included in a list of contracts totaling $237,004,301, almost all of which was for new weapons.

Mass manufacture of tanks on a far greater scale is contemplated in War Department estimates which President Roosevelt submitted to Congress this month, military quarters said.

Mr. Roosevelt's request for $3,436,034,036 for Army Ordnance covers sufficient tanks to create a reserve for possibly 40 armored divisions, it was calculated. These would be in addition to equipment now being turned out for 10 Army mechanized divisions.

Tanker Men, Ickes Confer; Keep Silence

Oil tanker owners and Secretary of the Interior Ickes conferred for more than an hour yesterday reportedly discussing the question of transferring additional tanker tonnage to Britain.

At the conclusion of the conference Ickes said in a statement:

"The transfer of oil tankers or proposals for their transfer, or the reallocation and diversion of tankers, is a matter of vital military information. Accordingly the Office of the Petroleum Coordinator cannot, at this time, comment on any discussions, proposals, or action taken at the meeting held today.

"I believe the American press generally will recognize that this particular subject is one which is of vital importance to our own national defense and, realizing that, that it will refrain from publishing such information insofar as it involves specifics."

There have been reports that from 80 to 100 more tankers were sought for British service, in addition to 50 previously turned over.

Industry leaders said previously that if they transfer 50 more tankers to British service their tanker fleet would be reduced to about 270 vessels. The companies already are hard pressed in meeting oil demands on the Eastern Seaboard, although the situation may be alleviated next year by construction of a pipe line.

The Senate yesterday adopted a conference report on a bill authorizing the Government to aid private firms to build pipelines from producing areas to consuming centers.

Trailer Tankers Urged

Duncan, Okla., July 21 (AP).—Erle P. Halliburton, president of an oil well cementing firm, believes he has the answer to the crude oil transportation shortage in a trailer type oil tanker to be towed by merchant ships.

"The tankers are a unique, novel design of a barge that can be constructed very rapidly," he said, "they require about half the amount of steel in tankers of equal capacity."

At Oklahoma City, Gen. Leon C. Phillips declared the tanker barges could transport enough oil to obviate the necessity for construction of a proposed pipe line from east Texas to New Jersey refineries. He accompanied Halliburton to Washington last week.

Nazis Plotting New Aggressions, Welles Says

throw the Bolivian government.

The Commerce Department revealed that the United States and Colombian governments had forced Paul von Bauer, Nazi air expansion gauleiter for South America, to quit Colombia "for a change in climate."

Welles sounded his alarm and revealed the counter moves in South America a few days after the United States blacklisted 1,800 firms in Latin America with German and Italian ties.

Iberia Named by Marshall

Though Welles would not name the countries where he expected Germany to commit new acts of aggression, Spain, Portugal and North Africa were named by Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, testifying on selective service legislation before the Senate Military Affairs Committee last week.

"You can see Spain, Portugal and North Africa covered very quickly," Marshall said. "Each move leaves the Axis forces more and more ready for another move."

Points of Editorial

Attacking Gen. Franco, Welles adopted as his own The Post's editorial. Thus the following main points in the editorial became expressions of State Department policy:

That Franco is being used "as the spearhead of a Nazi campaign to provoke discord among the Latin-American republics."

That the United States should send Spain no more food. Six shipments have already been sent at Spain's request.

That the United States scoffs at assertions by Gen. Franco and others that a war between Europe and the Americas would rob this hemisphere of the freedom of the seas.

Franco, in a speech to the National Council of the Falange (Fascist Party) last Thursday, had warned the United States to stay out of the war and had accused the United States of making gifts of food only on condition that the recipients bow to "the will of other nations."

Cites Red Cross Record

Welles, who had postponed comment on the Franco speech until he could study the text, made his remarks in answer to a newsman's question.

The Acting Secretary said he had intended to comment on the speech in some detail, but a Washington Post editorial yesterday so clearly and so comprehensively covered what he had in mind to say that he felt there was very little he could add.

Welles said that he merely wanted to stress this one fact: That in the history of the past 100 years there has been no agency that has done more to relieve human suffering in all parts of the world than the Red Cross. (The Red Cross distributed the food to which Franco referred.)

Welles went on to say that as a result of the desperate conditions that existed among a large part of the Spanish civilian population the Red Cross has undertaken to send supplies and medicines to Spain, particularly for children.

Freedom of the Seas

The allegation that the United States, said Welles, has sent such supplies contingent upon any policy to be prsued by the Spanish government is entirely untrue except in so far as it is evident that those supplies could not be given or distributed under war conditions.

The only other point he wanted to emphasize, Welles said, and one that he stated was very clearly brought out in the editorial, was that a Hitler victory would imperil freedom of the seas.

The allegation that if Hitler won the war the freedom of the seas would be guaranteed to the American republics is altogether counter to the obvious facts, Welles declared.

Defining the broad principles upon which American policies are framed, Welles said the whole security and prosperity of the American republics through the past 100 years, through their independent lifetime, have been founded on the fact that the Atlantic and other seas of the world were free and were controlled by powers that were friendly.

Colombia Ousts Nazi

The minute that freedom of the seas passes into hands untriendly to the American republics, he warned, the freedom of the seas as we have known it will no longer exist.

A Commerce Department announcement described Paul von Bauer, ousted from Colombia, as "Germany's ace director of aviation expansion for South America."

A pioneer since 1919 of German air activities in South America, Von Bauer created the German-subsidized SCAT Air Service, only recently dissolved by a decree of the Colombian government. It was a link in the Nazi air network below the Rio Grande.

The Commerce Department recounted that when Von Bauer was questioned in Baranquilla as to the reason for his hasty packing he simply stated that he "needed a change in climate." He has moved his entire family to Chile, where, according to the Commerce Department, he has attempted to ingratiate himself with the Chilean government by presenting Chile with an old German steamer, locked in Valparaiso Harbor by the British blockade.

"The flight of von Bauer from his activities in close proximity to the Panama Canal Zone marks a climax this week in the increasing effectiveness of inter-American cooperation for curtailing the activities of German agents within reach of the Panama Canal fortifications," the Commerce Department stated, "and marks the beginning of a period in Latin America in which other anti-American agents will become refugees, shifting from place to place in an unsuccessful effort to find sympathetic communities in which to live and continue their activities."

Post's Editorial Expressed U. S. Views on Franco, Welles Says

The Post's editorial yesterday morning on Spanish Gen. Franco's verbal attack on this country was said by Acting Secretary of State Welles to have covered, so clearly and so comprehensively, what he had had in mind to say on the subject that there was very little he could add.

"Tool Of The Axis"

"Franco's abject submission to Berlin was strikingly revealed last Thursday by his militant and obviously Axis-inspired speech before the National Council of the Falange. The Spanish dictator is apparently being used as the spearhead of a Nazi campaign to provoke discord among the Latin-American republics, for his words were clearly designed for consumption below the Rio Grande. First of all, in line with the customary Nazi propaganda technique, he tried to discredit the United States. Whenever this country has offered economic aid to Spain, he said, it has always tried to force Spain to obey the will of other nations. This is, of course, untrue. Six shiploads of foods and medicines have been sent to Spain at the urgent request of the Spanish government. There was no accompanying condition except that the supplies were to be used to alleviate Spanish suffering and were not to be sent on to other countries under German or Italian control. When Franco delivered his speech he was perfectly familiar with the situation. Yet he has seen fit to distort the facts to suit his own—or Hitler's—purpose. Considering his bitter denunciation of the United States, expressed repeatedly throughout his speech, the only dignified course for this country is to withhold further shipments. If Franco places allegiance to Berlin ahead of the desperate needs of his own country, the choice is his—and so is the responsibility.

"Franco claimed that the Allies have already lost the war and that American action now might change the conflict into a war between Europe and the Americas. 'This could only lead to the ruin of the American nations,' he said. His argument may seem potent to some of our sister republics, but he erred badly when he stressed that such a war would end the liberty of the seas for the Americas. The plain truth is that it would not, given the unity of action which is the basis of hemisphere defense. The Nazis appreciate this; hence their efforts through Franco to divide the enthusiasms and loyalties of Latin America. Regardless of how effective a propagandist the Spanish general may prove to be, the Nazis will continue their divide and rule tactics. That Franco is but an expedient tool will surely be clear to our shrewd fellow Americans to the south."

Still Slicing Up Red Army, Germans Say

Berlin, July 21.—German forces which have smashed through the Stalin line are fighting a "big, destructive battle" behind the fortifications which were Russia's chief reliance against invasion from the west, a German military spokesman declared tonight.

In the German view, the whole Soviet defense structure is tottering.

As the spokesman described it:

Russian land and air forces have suffered irreplaceable losses and are drawing on their last reserves.

Soviet troops cannot rally for a satisfactory new defense line.

German forces, a large part of which have not been used so far, can be thrown into action at full strength.

Likened to Allies in West

The spokesman compared the Russians' plight at the end of the first month of the struggle in the east with that of the British and French between the Meuse River and the English Channel after the turning of the Maginot line in June, 1940.

There was no breathing spell for the British and French then, he said, and the Russians are not getting time to reorganize behind the Stalin line now.

Although the French armistice came ten days after the breakthrough of the Weygand line, where the French generalissimo tried to rally his forces before Paris, the spokesman indicated there would be no such brief aftermath in Russia.

He pictured the situation as "different and more difficult" and cited, for one thing, the Soviety's vast spaces. But German troops credited now with having pushed roughly 375 miles forward from the erstwhile German-Russian frontier can solve the new problems, he declared.

A strategy of many, complex encirclement movements pocketing isolated Red Army units was said to be paying dividends in a growing number of Russian divisions wiped out.

No Large Force Taken

There was no indication of any extraordinarily large Russian forces captured, but many independent actions scattered all over the front were said to be producing an impressive toll of prisoners.

As the Germans explained this mammoth operation, the Luftwaffe and motorized columns far out in front have virtually cut the Russians off from retreat. Unable to get away, they said, much of the Russian army faces the alternative of breaking the German pincers or perishing.

German press reports told of the destruction of one division near Moshilev, about 125 miles east of Minsk, despite stubborn Russian resistance and weather which handicapped blitz tactics. This division was said to have been a regrouping of remnants of five others.

The Russians, they said, left more than 4,000 dead on the battlefield and lost several thousand others as captives.

Others are encircled north of Vitebsk, Dvina River railroad town, and have suffered heavy losses in attempts to break out of the German ring, D. N. B., official German news agency, said.

The high command still is disclosing no details, but the war bulletin from Adolf Hitler's headquarters summarized the situation in broad outline corresponding to the spokesman's analysis.

All of General Successes

"In the southern sector of the eastern front, German, Rumanian and Hungarian troops are pursuing the enemy," it declared. "Operations on the entire front continue to take their successful course with the destruction of numerous encircled groups."

The Russians, admittedly are not giving up without a fight. All dispatches from the front agree the resistance is desperate.

The air force, which bombed one encircled group in the Smolensk area, according to these reports, claimed it had destroyed 340 motor vehicles and 26 tanks. The Luftwaffe was credited also with destruction of 97 Soviet planes Sunday, and a Russian destroyer, another Red navy warship of more than 3,000 tons and a 2,000-ton Russian merchantman in the White Sea arm of the Arctic.

German reports insisted there were increasing signs of deterioration within the Red army.

D. N. B. said one Russian regiment pinched off and seized near Kiev, the Russian Ukraine capital, was made up largel yof hastily mobilized and inadequately armed citizens of the city.

Itquoted prisoners as saying fugitives of both sexes were being rounded up, armed, and thrust into battle with almost no training.

(Women with the Red army serve as nurses and auxiliaries but not as fighters, the Russian government has asserted.)

Prisoners were quoted as telling of growing friction between army officers and political commissars and the story was published of one captive who, a few hours before, had been sentenced to death by a tribunal of officers. Friendly soldiers, the story said, gave the commissar a chance to escape.

Luftwaffe Bombs Moscow for the First Time; 200 Planes Over City 5 Hours; Leningrad Hit

By International News Service

Moscow (Tuesday), July 22.—Germany finally threw her Luftwaffe against Moscow during the night.

After a month of war, the German air force, which has seen service over practically every major city of Europe, swarmed toward the historic Russian capital during the night.

Still other units struck at Russia's second largest city, Leningrad.

Both attacks were officially declared to have been repulsed by blazing Soviet antiaircraft guns and fighter planes.

"Several persons" were killed in Moscow as 200 German planes roared over the city for five and a half hours.

Seventeen of them were brought down, and none of them managed to drop their bombs on military objectives, an official announcement said.

19 Nazis Reported Felled at Leningrad

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Tuesday), July 22.—Soviet Russian troops meeting the full shock of the sustained German offensive are fighting intensely in the key areas defending the cities of Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev, it was reported early today.

The Russian communique merely said heavy fighting was in progress in the areas around Polotsk, Nevel, Smol ensk and Novograd Volynski.

The communique told also of the repulse of an attempted air attack on Leningrad.

The war report said German attempts to raid Leningrad were intercepted by defense units of the Red air force "and the enemy aircraft were unable to reach the Leningrad district."

It added that 11 German planes were shot down in the first attempt to raid Leningrad and eight others were downed in a second attempt. The Soviets said four of their planes were lost.

Stalin Takes Command

By the United Press

Moscow, July 21.—German forces today smashed savagely at Soviet lines on the Moscow and Ukrainian fronts as Josef V. Stalin was proclaimed commander in chief of the Red army.

The spokesman, Vice Foreign Commissar S. A. Lozovsky, said great masses of guerrilla bands—thousands of them—were carrying out widespread attacks behind the German lines as the Battle of Russia ended its first month with heavy losses.

The guerrilla bands, he said, are wrecking communications and ambushing troops, and although the German forces hold certain frontline positions "there are hundreds of villages and cities behind them which still are under Soviet rule."

German officers themselves were said to have admitted that the Nazi losses in a month of savage fighting have become "intolerable," far greater than the Russians' losses, and that the German effort to crush Russia "faces inevitable doom."

Lozovsky announced that Stalin, having assumed the post of war commissar and undisputed master of Russia's resistance, is "now officially the commander in chief of the Red army."

An official announcement of the information bureau said that German fliers have "specialized" in machine-gunning defenseless trains.

Stalin as commander in chief of the Russian armed forces made further shifts in the Soviet defense organization Monday by appointing four new vice commissars of defense to serve under him.

The 4 new vice commissars, increasing to 11 the number of vice commissars of defense, are E. A. Shadenk, army commissar, presumably chief of the political commissars; Gen. Y. N. Gedorenk, tank troop specialist; Gen. A. V. Khrulev, and aviation Gen. P. F. Zhrulev.

They were named, presumably, to make up for last week's supreme Soviet decree which sent Russia's three most outstanding military leaders, all marshals of the Soviet Union, to the three key fighting fronts protecting Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev.

The German armored forces meanwhile were reported to be smashing violently at Soviet resistance west of Moscow and the Ukraine in an effort to get their stalled blitzkrieg rolling again.

There were heavy assaults aided by swarms of bombers in the Smolensk region, 230 miles west of Moscow.

Monday's morning communique told of German attacks on two sectors west of Moscow and in the Novograd-Volynsk region at the frontier of the Russian Ukraine, west of Kiev.

In the Polotsk-Uevel-Smolensk triangle of heavy fighting the Russians appeared on the basis of the morning communique, to be putting up a stone-wall defense.

No mention was made of the course of the fighting in the vital Fskov-Porkhov region protecting Leningrad, but it was understood there, too, the Germans were throwing men and material recklessly into an attempt to smash the Russian resistance.

The communique early Monday said Russian planes had destroyed 31 German planes, in air battles and on the ground, against the Red air force's loss of only 6 planes.

The Red army command asserted one Russian army unit had destroyed two battalions of German heavy artiery and 300 German trucks, that another had captured 189 trucks, 5 tanks and 4 armored cars and that a third had seized a Nazi air field.

45 Axis Employes Refuse to Leave; U.S. Studies Action

complicated legal questions would be involved.

Some of the 45 persons may have legitimate grounds for remaining in the United States. They may have dual nationality and merely have been employed in German or Italian consulates or commercial enterprises while retaining their American as well as their foreign nationality. Though American citizens, such persons would be named by either Germany or Italy as foreign nationals in the lists they submit to the State Department of their consular employees.

State Department officials would not make public the list of those who refused to sail. They said that it would be held confidential, merely explaining that for the most part the list was made up of clerks, stenographers and messengers.

Some Begged to Stay

Officials had expected that some of the Germans and Italians might try to stay in the country, but they had not suspected until after the ship sailed and they consulted their lists how many would not go at the last minute.

Letters were sent by some of the employes begging that they be allowed to stay, because in many cases they had been in the United States for from 10 to 20 years. No exceptions were allowed, however.

Other grounds which were suggested tonight as the reason some of the consular employes had not wished to sail were that they had been away from their home lands so long that they were not in favor of the Fascist or Nazi forms of government, and that they preferred possible imprisonment in the United States to the risk of concentration camps at home.

Several of the persons ordered home are ill, and they may remain in this country until they are better before returning to Germany and Italy, while others have American wives or husbands.

On the other hand, reports have reached the Government that some of the employs of th foreign consulates left the cities where they were working with the announced intention of sailing on the West Point, and that they had just failed to reach their destination and had not been heard from since.

Any such individuals will have to be found, and deportation proceedings or other action instituted against them in the American courts if they have no valid excuse for remaining.

The German and Italian Embassies are responsible for the consular employes who have failed to leave the United States. According to the agreement concerning the exchange of American consulate employes from Europe and Germans and Italians in the United States, each government is responsible for ordering its nationals to return home.

Americans Leave Barcelona

Madrid, July 21 (AP).—A party of 80 Amerncan consuls, vice consuls, clerks and their families, homeward bound from Italy and Greece as a result of Italian closing of the consulates, left Barcelona for Madrid today.

Two hundred twenty Americans coming from Germany and German-occupied territory, mostly consular employes and their families similarly ordered out, are expected to cross into Spain from France tomorrow.

British Report Mutiny Among Nazis in Norway

New York, July 21 (U.P.).—German troops in Norway, in the vicinity of Bergen, have mutinied and killed several of their officers, the London radio asserted in a French-language broadcast heard by the United Press listening post late today.

The London radio said that "bloody fighting" occurred and that, in an effort to prevent the news from leaking out to the Norwegian population, the dead were buried during the night.

"But the news spread promptly through the whole country," the British radio account continued.

Berlin Camouflaged to Fool Raiders, U. S. Diplomat Says

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—Lincoln Mac Veagh, American Minister to Greece, said today that the Germans had begun to camouflage Berlin in an attempt to divert the Royal Air Force from vital targets.

Mac Veagh, who arrived on the American export liner Exeter after quitting war-torn Greece, via Berlin, said the Germans had planted trees atop the stadium there and used green colors to conceal vital objects.

"The bicycle track from Berlin to Potsdam has been painted green instead of white," he said, "and they are covering the ponds outside Berlin with reeds and branches to keep them from being used as landmarks."

The minister said German cities had been damaged, "but you have to hunt" to see the evidence. British bombs, he said, tore the roofs off a block of apartment houses, but the Germans quickly reroofed them.

The opera house in Berlin was "gutted—a complete wreck," he said.

Describing the German people as apathetic over the war, he said they showed no enthusiasm when war with Russia began.

He described Greece as in terrible want of food and said he saw no way of stopping the "steady progression toward famine."

Greek soldiers who fought the Italians in Albania had been forced to walk home and many were begging for food on the streets, MacVeagh said.

"The Greek communication system was entirely smashed," he said. "The British blew up the railroads and the Corinth Canal and their fishing is gone."

The minister said the Greeks still favored the British and that many stood on roof tops to cheer British planes when they came over at night to bomb Greek airports and camps now in Italian hands.

His reports on camouflage in Germany coincided with London reports which said the Nazis were constructing a bogus Berlin to lure British bombers from the capital. A wood and cardboard outline of a whole community had been constructed near Berlin, these London reports said.

Australian Honored For Raid on Bremen

London, July 21 (AP).—The Victoria Cross was conferred today on Actnig Wing Comdr. High Idwal Edwards, 26, Australian in the British Royal Air Force, for "greatest skill and coolness" in leading his formation through a balloon barrage and heavy antiaircraft fire to batter Bremen in daylight July 4. Four planes were lost.

The President's Day

By International News Service

NEW TRICK: Mr. Roosevelt had a date with the radio men yesterday at 11 a. m., and was 40 minutes late. It was a sneak preview of history in the making, and the radio technicians and announcers had a front seat inside the old diplomatic reception room. Only they and right-hand-man Steve Early were present. To them the President read his 2,000-word message to Congress, asking for declaration of a national emergency and warning of heightened Nazi menaces.

A DISC FOR DRAFTEES: His words were graven in wax, and a few moments later were played by radio networks to the Nation, and were read by clerks to the Senate and House.

REPORTER TROUBLE: The transcription trick worked so smoothly that it got a step ahead of the White House correspondents. The mimeograph was slow in grinding out copies of the press. Result: Reporters were frantically phoning their offices with the flash, while the words were flying everywhere, on Capitol Hill, and over the ether.

NOONTIME TRIO: Mr. Roosevelt got right back to his priviate office and began a round of appointments. Singly, he saw for a quarter hour each, Budget Director Harold Smith, with lease-lend worries; Defense Chief Knudsen, fresh from a lightning swing around the country, and P. D. Houston, president of the American Bankers Association. Houston emerged with a dour quote that inflation is just around the corner.

LUNCHEON FOR ONE: The President drew a deep breath, and settled back at his desk for a little nourishment, without benefit of company. He rang for the waiter and dug into a pile of paper work.

APPOINTMENTS: The President suddenly came up with the appointment of Guy Mason, 60-year-old barrister and former White House newshawk, as Commissioner for the District. He also named Thomas Wilson, of Tennessee, as United States Commissioner to India, with rank of minister.

AIR CONDITION: Then the President summoned his limousine, and took a brief, quiet ride through the Capital, a slightly tired Chief Executive at the close of a busy day.

Liberation Nears, Eden Tells Belgians in 'V' Broadcast

By the United Press

London, July 21.—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden tonight joined Britain's fast-spreading "V for Victory" crusade with a radio message to the German-conquered people of Belgium assuring them that the day of their liberation is approaching "and may not be long delayed."

Eden spoke to the Belgians on their national independence day as British officials predicted that the "V" crusade and mustering of a great anti-Nazi army throughout Europe, coupled with mounting British bombings, might be a prelude to "possible big-scale foray against the continent."

An official announcement said the mobilization of the V-army among Europe's conquered millions was designed for an eventual zero-hour when the Nazi-dominated masses will "go over the top with us in our final offensive."

The announcement was made by N. F. Newsome, European news editor of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Eden promised the Belgians that they will "once more be free" and that the Allies will continue to strike at the Axis with increasing force.

"We are confident of the justice of our cause and we are sure of victory," he said. "We know that you share our faith and our certainty and that you will hold fast and do all in your power to frustrate the Nazis by every means at your disposal . . . We will not fail you."

Newsome said the V campaign was a carefully planned offensive intended to cover many things, "things a great deal more worrying for the Germans that the V sign."

"I am unable to disclose these things since the Germans would like to know about them," he added.

"The V battle is the first pitched battle in a propaganda war, and I can say we already have won it."

Exiles Hold 'V' Session in London

London, July 21.—Representatives of the many oppressed countries in Europe held a meeting in London today and allied themselves in the "V-for-Victory War" which is now sweeping through their homelands. These members of the inter-allied rotary outpost, included Poles, Czechs, Norwegians, Belgians, Hollanders and French.

Casimimir Zienkiewicz, the founder of the Polish outpost, speaking in English, said:

"In Poland the V sign is used for the word 'victoria' which actually means 'long live' like the French word 'vive.' It has been used for a thousand years by the Poles."

Gov. Talmadge Warns 2 Papers

Atlanta, July 21 (AP).—Gov. Eugene Talmadge announced today he would withhold executive news from two Atlanta dailies unless "they correct their attitude" in regard to the recent hearings for two educators on charges of advocating racial coeducation.

The Governor declared in a press conference that the Atlanta Journal (p. m.) and the Atlanta Constitution (a. m.) had printed "front-page editorials" in their stories of the hearing. He declared the papers were "willing to penalize Georgia in any way to hit Talmadge."

"If the Constitution and the Journal don't correct their attitude I'm not going to give them any news because they are wrong and they are doing the State of Georgia an injustice," the Governor said. "They have gone beyond the pale of decency."

Dean Walter D. Cocking, of the University of Georgia School of Education, and President Marvin S. Pittman, of Georgia Teachers' College, were ousted last week after a hearing by the State Board of Regents.

Big R. A. F. Raids Called Just Prelude to History's Greatest

By the Associated Press

London, July 21.—The aerial offensive against Germany's western front, marked today by swarming cross-Channel attacks, is but the prelude for the heaviest air raids in history which the R. A. F. will launch against Germany in the next three months, it was asserted authoritatively in London.

With the aid of American aircraft such as the Douglas Havoc and the biggest Boeings, which are superior to the new German planes, complete British air superiority should be reached before midwinter, experts say. Reliable sources emphasize that the R. A. F. now is able to exert local command wherever it so wishes within the range of Britain.

More British First-Line Craft

The extent of British raids in the last two months in northern Europe, increasing convoy protection by the R. A. F., continued reports of fairly heavy British air operations in the Middle East and so-called failure of the Luftwaffe to bomb heavily behind the Russian lines led one expert observes to two conclusions:

1. Germany never fully made up for the tremendous losses suffered in the war since the Flanders campaign. Either German industry has been too slow or the Luftwaffe training scheme has foundered. At any rate, experts believe Nazi air strength now is far below the 4,000-plane operation strength estimated by the British magazine Aeroplane.

2. British air strength, allowing for aircraft diverted to North Africa and other parts of the empire, now is greater in operational aircraft—that is, first-line fighters, bombers and reconnaissance craft—than the Luftwaffe.

There is wide speculation in London on the extent of R. A. F. attacks on German fortifications on the French coast.

British Landings Foreseen

Some quarters hold such attacks are preliminary to some large-scale landing by the British, but it is more reasonable to assume that the British are merely trying to smash German guns which shell Channel convoys.

Since the majority of these guns are railway-mounted it is assumed that they are well hidden when not in action. The British bombers probably are trying to destroy the tracks by which they are brought into firing positions and to batter the fixed-mount, short-range cannon which would stand in the path of any British attempt at a landing.

As the nights lengthen attacks on a scale "which will make Coventry look like a pinprick" will be aimed at German industry from the industrial Ruhr valley to Prague, capital of dismembered Czecho-Slovakia.

In the number of planes engaged and the weight of bombs dropped, the attacks will surpass those which, the British say, distributed 7,000,000 pounds of bombs on Cologne, Bremen and the Ruhr from June 16 to July 10.

As the raids increase in range and strength there will be no slackening of the daylight offensive aimed at attrition of Luftwaffe fighter strength and German coastwise shipping.

R. A. F. Pilots Delighted

There is every indication that these forays, which among other things are said to have sunk or damaged more than a quarter million tons of shipping in the last two weeks, will be doubled in intensity.

R. A. F. officers say they are delighted at reports that some of the Luftwaffe's crack fighter squadrons have been diverted from the Russion front to try to hold the air over northern Europe against marauding Spitfires, Hurricanes and Blenheims.

There is great satisfaction in London over the destruction done in Germany. It is claimed that the entire Fockewulf aircraft plant at Bremen had been destroyed as well as "about a third" of the merchant fleet for coastal shipping.

Germany had expected this fleet to take the load off a railway system already overbalanced by the Russian campaign, the British ministry of economic warfare said. It added that "the problem of distribution in Germany, already acute, will grow worse as the effects of this loss of shipping spread."

"Coal Shortage"

The same authorities declared that "there is almost certain to be a coal shortage in Germany this winter because of a lack of transport."

Today bombers, accompanied by strong fighter forces, were reported to have smashed again at industrial Lille in northern France, following up overnight raids on Cologne in the Rhineland and Rotterdam in the Netherlands. Eight German planes were reported destroyed at a cost of three R. A. F. fighters.

In another R. A. F. offensive sweep over the Channel and northern France late tonight, the air ministry said one German plane was destroyed and three R. A. F. fighters were missing.

An Air Ministry communique said the attack on Cologne started large fires in the industrial section there.

The general British air attack is claimed to be "far more evenly and widely distributed" than the German assaults on Britain. The Germans say they dropped 300 tons of bombs on Coventry in one night whereas the R. A. F. says it dropped 1,000 tons of bomb on Cologne in the period, June 16-July 10.

"There was no other large scale attack in Britain the night Coventry was bombed," an air expert said. "But while the R. A. F. was bombing Cologne it also was bombing the Ruhr and Bremen and its fighters were hunting Luftwaffe fighters over their nests."

Morgenthau Plans Program To Avert Inflation

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau, appearing greatly disturbed about the effects of possible inflation on the national economy, yesterday promised a formal statement on the remedies he would recommend.

Morgenthau declared at a press conference that the Government should do "half a dozen things," and "the sooner the better," to avert the inflation peril, but he declined to name them yet. He indorsed fully, however, the recommendation Sunday of a 50 per cent cut in auto output by Price Administrator Leon Henderson.

The Treasury's campaign to sell defense bonds and savings stamps, one of its moves to combat inflation by siphoning off excess savings, is going satisfactorily, Morgenthau said.

The Treasury has studied the enforced savings plan originated in Great Britain by John Maynard Keynes, famed British economist, under which a portion of the wage-earner's pay is withheld each week and invested for him in Government bonds, payable after the war.

U. of Md. Coach Sinking After Inn Shooting

Lt. Coleman Headley, 28-year-old acting track coach of the University of Maryland, who was shot late Sunday night in a tavern near Laurel, Md., continued in a critical condition last night at University Hospital, Baltimore, after an operation failed to remove a 38 - caliber bullet believed lodged in his back near the spine.

HEADLEY

Hospital officials said Headley's condition grew worse yesterday afternoon and an operation was attempted.

Headley was shot at the Evergreen Tourist Camp near Laurel.

Maryland State Police are holding Guy Constanene, 50, of 3900 Chatham Road, Baltimore, on a charge of assault with intent to kill. Constanene is part owner of the tourist camp, and is being held in the Howard County jail, Ellicott City.

According to Sergt. Wilton May, who investigated, Headley was shot after he and a companion, John E. Cullen, jr., of Laurel, objected to a slot machine which they said would not pay off.

An argument with Constanene followed, according to police, and Headley and his companion left the building after Contanen sent Benjamin Ruth, 71, watchman at the camp, for a gun.

When the man returned with the gun, Contanen is said to have followed Headley outside and fired five shots.

The shooting was witnessed by five soldiers from Fort Meade, who were in the tavern when the argument took place. Headley's wife and a woman companion were in a nearby parked automobile.

Both Constanen and Ruth were held without bail by Trial Magistrate J. Lewis Thompson, of Elkridge. Ruth was charged with carrying a deady weapon openly and with intent to injure someone.

Headley, who was Southern Conference outdoor mile champion before his graduation from the University of Maryland in 1938, had been acting track coach at the university since last fall when Geary Eppley, athletic director and track coach, was called to active duty with the Army.

While an undergraduate, Headley starred in basketball, football and track. In 1934 as a sophomore he won a varsity football berth and played as a regular for three years. He played guard on the basketball team in 1937-38, and in addition to his Southern Conference mile championship held a number of stadium track records at College Park.

He has been operating a farm near Dorsey, Md., since his marriage in 1939 to the former Frances Kircher, a beauty queen at the university in 1938.

Blacked-Out Motorcade of 76 Cars Creeps Through Arlington Giving 'War Wounded' Aid

REALISTIC DEMONSTRATION—Frank Fulk, one of the members of the Jefferson Rescue Squad who played victims in last night's blackout demonstration in Arlington, is attended by Mrs. W. W. Barrow, Mrs. Howard Cheney and LaVerne Parrish. Members of the American Women's Volunteer Service motor corps and ambulance unit gave first aid to the "injured men." Here, a splint is expertly applied to Fulk, who "suffered a broken leg"

A blacked-out motorcade of 76 autos snaked through the Arlington County, Va., countryside last night in search of six "wounded men.

The men—very much unhurt—were those of members of the Jefferson Rescue Squad. In the autos, rode member of the American Womens Volunteer Service Motor Corps and ambulance unit.

All were taking prat in a peacetime drama behind which lay the grim significance of preparation for war in the Capital area.

The motorcade rolled away from Twenty-third Street and Arlington Ridge Road at dusk under an escort of county policemen. With lights out they crawled at 10 miles per hour along Arlington Ridge Road and turned onto Army-Navy Drive in total darkness.

From the darkness came a groan by the roadside. At a signal the motorcade stopped, and four autos were detailed to investigate, while the line proceeded in formation.

The groan came from the lips of Thomas P. Taylor, a member of the Jefferson Rescue Squad, who was found to be simulating the pain of a broken arm and face cuts. He was given first-aid emergency treatment and the detailed autos returned him to the base.

Other rescue squad members playing the roles of injured men included Fred Howlin, William McKim, Thomas Poland, Byron Broks and Frank Fulk. They lay along a 2-mile darkened stretch of Army-Navy Drive. Other autos were detailed to give them first-aid treatment, while the main motorcade continued on a 10-mile circuit, by Glebe Road and returning along Arlington Ridge Road.

Sidney R. Gould, director of safety education for the Washington unit of the national organization, explained that besides giving members practice in first-aid methods under wartime conditions, last night's experiment provided them with knowledge of the countryside.

"We are trying to train our members so that in case of an air raid they will be well prepared to go into immediate action," he said.

M. R. Bruin, captain of the rescue squad, was in charge of the squad's activities. Preceding the motorcade, he gave a demonstration of the use of gas and oxygen masks with members of his squad.

Gould stated that a similar test is planned to be held in nearby Maryland within the next month.

Lieut. James Scott was in charge of the police detail which escorted the autos.

Marine Band to Ask 'Any Bonds Today'

A new arrangement of Irving Berlin's bond-vending air, "Any Bonds Today," will be introduced by the Marine Band during their concert today at 12:30 from the Treasury booth at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue.

The special arrangement was made by Louis Saverino, bass horn player in the band.

Boy Admits Attack On Girl, Soldier

very definite description of her assailant.

The description went on the air. Slattery picked it up, and was surprised to note how closely the description of the hunted man fitted the mental picture he had of the fellow he had seen just a few days before.

So yesterday morning Slattery told his partner Beach to go to the bottling works and "look the man over." Beach did so, and made an arrest at 10 a. m.

The man steadfastly denied any connection with the crime, but broke down under the questioning of veterans Scott and L. N. Wilson, detective sergeants from the Detective Bureau, who were called into the case by the precinct men.

A native of Winston-Salem, N. C., the man arrived in this city on Thursday, he told Capt. Ira B. Keck, acting head of the Detective Bureau.

Was Sleeping Out

When questioned at Police Headquarters the man told Capt. Keck he had no abode but had been sleeping in the open at a lumber yard on New York Avenue near his place of work.

He said that he was wandering in the Patterson Woods Saturday night when he came across the man and woman sitting on a paper under a tree. He approached them and told them he was a watchman and demanded money. The soldier had only 15 cents. He talked with the couple for a while, he told Capt. Keck.

Capt. Keck said the man then confessed that he engaged in a fight with the soldier and hit him with a rock and then criminally attacked the girl.

The girl told police later she gave the man a mother of pearl pin with the name Joyce spelled across it. Detective Sergts. L. N. Wilson and Irving Lubore recovered the pin and his clothes which he wore at the time of the attack. Last night the girl identified the pin as the one her assailant had taken from her. The clothes found by the detectives were splattered with blood. The clothes and pin were found in the lumber pile where the man slept.

Given Chemical Tests

The man yesterday was taken to the District Morgue where Dr. Christopher Murphy deputy coroner, performed the usual chemical tests in such cases.

While at police headquarters the man was questioned by Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown and confessed his crime to police officials, it was stated.

A representative of the District Attorney's office was present when the man gave his statement to Acting Lieut. Jeremiah Flaherty of the homicide squad.

Girl Identifies Assailant

Last night the man was brought before the girl at police headquarters, and she identified him as her assailant. She is under the care of a private physician for treatment for shock and internal injuries.

Meanwhile, her escort, Lawrence McCullough, 32, a District selectee at Fort Meade, remained in a critical condition in Walter Reed Hospital. In his fight with the intruder he suffered severe head injuries and cuts on his throat inflicted with a razor.

During the recent House investigation of the Metropolitan Police Department Inspector James F. Beckett, it was recalled last night, blamed alleged police inefficiency on conditions under which the "man on the beat" works.

The policeman used to know everyone on his beat, the inspector pointed out. But now there is so much ground for each officer to cover, and so much of it is covered by scout car, he can't be as close to the man on the street as he once was.

But Private Slattery who has been on the force six years, has shown the days the inspector feared lost are not entirely gone.

More Power Pools Created To Speed Aluminum Output

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The Office of Production Management announced yesterday the creation of a special power unit which in effect will serve as the Government's defense power planning and coordinating agency, and whose first accomplishment has been the provision of one million kilowatts of electricity to meet the full demands of the new aluminum expansion program.

The power will be derived from resources and reserves of public and private utility systems, to be linked in two vast power pools in addition to that recently announced for the Southeastern States. Together, the three pools will provide energy interconnections extending from Arkansas and Texas to the Atlantic Coast and northward through Pennsylvania and New York to New England.

Creation of the unit, which will "handle all defense power problems through a single clearing house," was immediately interpreted as smashing widely reported plans of Interior Secretary Ickes for establishing himself as "energy coordinator" or defense power czar.

Ickes, already established as defense coordinator of petroleum and seeking to have control of anthracite coal added to the functions he already holds through his Department's bituminous coal division, has been reported as heading a concerted drive for authority over power. The progress of this campaign, sharply opposed by OPM, the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Federal Power Commission, has been one of the major behind-the-scenes Administration battles in recent weeks.

A defense official said yesterday that Ickes had been close to achieving his aims and that he had been only "tackled on the 1-yard line" through the OPM's assumption of the coordinating duties.

The head of the new unit, J. A. Krug, on leave from his post as TVA power manager, said yesterday that by the interconnections through the three pools, "solutions have already been found" for the temporary supply of 1,000,000 kilowatts necessary for the production of the OPM goal of 1,600,000,000 pounds' annual aluminum output. In addition, it was stated, the supply would also permit expanded magnesium production.

At a press conference, Krug explained that through the tapping of the reserves of individual utility systems, both public and private, over a wide territory, power will be available in time to supply all requirements as the contemplated new aluminum plants become ready for production. This solution is only temporary, he explained, and the ultimate answer will be in the construction of new steam and hydroelectric plants.

Although Krug discounted the probability of immediate power priorities or rationing, pointing out that recent rains had alleviated the acute drought-created power shortage in the Southeast, he said the future "depends on how kind Mother Nature is."

Another drought, he explained, would make priorities "extremely probable." The first step in this procedure would be curtailment of nonessential electricity uses, such as neon lights, he explained.

news. He refused and redoubled his attacks on the Nazi infiltration.

Beside his knowledge of the Transocean technique, Regueros Peralta knew his country thoroughly and in the last few years had surveyed it with an engineer's eye in preparing his power development proposal. The Post learned that he was in a position to give valuable evidence of the extent of Nazi construction and transportation projects in Colombia. There had been reports that many of these developments are adaptable to military use and could be the starting points of blows against the Panama Canal.

Another Cancels Trip

Regueros Peralta's was not the only testimony lost to the District Court when he was shot down. The Post learned that another publisher, A. Galvis, director of the Bucaramanga paper, El Vanguardia Liberal, who was scheduled to testify here against Transocean, is still in Colombia, having canceled his trip after his colleague was murdered.

McNulty and his aides, Special Assistants William P. Maloney, Edward J. Hickey and Albert E. Arent, had hoped to present about 20 newspaper officials from Central and South America. However, since the trial opened last Thursday before Federal Judge T. Whitfield Davidson, the prosecutors have emphasized the word "hope" in connection with these witnesses, explaining that American courts cannot compel the attendance of persons in other countries.

The Department of Justice even declined to comment on the Regueros Peralta killing, saying that they had been asked about such a report but had no information to give.

McNulty only shook his head when asked directly about the connection between the murder in Colombia and the propaganda trial in Washington.

"I wouldn't know about his affair," he said, "and I certainly could not make any comment whatever while the Transocean trial is being presented to a Federal jury. We shall present the evidence in open court. That is about all I could say."

The disclosures of the third day of the Transocean trial yesterday chiefly portrayed the wide extent of the agency's mail service for which it collected $1 a month, although the stamps alone cost three or four times that much.

To Promote Nazi Ideals

Albert Guise, receiver-publisher of The Free Press, Geman language paper in Cincinnati, explained how Transocean's dispatches came to appear in his paper. He identified an editor named Schmidt as the man who wrote to Manfred Zapp, Transocean American head, who worked under direct supervision of the German Embassy. Schmidt said the paper needed money and would certainly use a service if it were cheap and urged that a special rate be granted. Schmidt said in the letters that he wished to promote German ideals.

Karl Richard Bruell, of the San Francisco (Calif.) Democrat, testified that his paper got Transocean dispatches for $1 a month, but that the daily envelope carried from 6 to 30 cents in stamps. Similiar testimony was given by Herman Ferno, of the Rochester Abendpost (whose paper never was asked to pay Transocean anything), Paul H. Mueller, of the Chicago Abendpost; Harry B. Schunecht, Buffalo, N. Y., Volksfreund, and Joseph Simmons, Detroit Abendpost. The editors who paid for the service said they sent their money to German consulates.

From documents seized in the Transocean office in New York, the Government produced a schedule showing that other recipients of the Transocean service were German language papers in New York City, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Los Angeles and Winnipeg.

Worked in Canada, Too

From the 18 file boxes of documents seized in the Transocean raid, the prosecutors also produced information about Transocean extension into Canada.

An official named as Blankenhorn, of the German consulate in Washington, transmitted to Zapp a request from the German consulate in Montreal that German steamship agencies in Montreal be granted special rates on the Transocean service. The letters explained that the agencies were operated by Mueller Hickler, who was the Nazi party chief in the Canadian city. Hickler, it was explained, could use the Transocean material to good advantage in his propaganda activity.

A further request from the Montreal consulate was for Transocean service to Adrien Arcand, described as a Fascist sympathizer and "fuehrer" on the Canadian National Unity Party. Arcand, the Montreal German consul said, would use the Transocean material in his party publication, L'Illustration Nouvelle, without mentioning its source. The correspondence urged granting the special rates "for official reasons."

A Transocean memorandum expressed impatience with the editors of the Chicago Abendpost, who were described as "old-fashioned Germans" who would not use much Transocean news because they were afraid it concealed propaganda.

Transocean correspondence, translated and placed before the jury, spoke of weekly reports filed by Dr. Zapp with the German Embassy in Washington. Also quoted were letters in which he appealed to the embassy for money to meet his expenses.

As on previous days of the trial, every document produced drew objections from Defense Attorney Emil Morosini, jr., of the New York firm of Cohalen & Morosini. Judge Davidson consistently overruled the protests.

Morosini objected earnest /to introduction of a letter Dr. Zapp wrote to a relative, Dr. Ing Burghard Zapp, of Dusseldorf, Germany. After it was admitted, the prosecutors read only the postscript, in which Dr. Zapp remarked that he "had a great deal of business to transact with the representative in Washington of the Reich propaganda ministry."

Both Zapp and Guenther Tonn, his chief aide, were indicted when the Transocean Co. was. However, only a few days before the trial began, the two men were allowed to leave the country, in a deal by which the State Department obtained the release of four Americans in German jails. Both Zapp and Tonn would have faced long jail terms if convicted here.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Succor for Selectees Begins to Take Shape

Entertainment Plans Outlined for Nine Camps; Loew Houses Promise a Fruitful Summer; News Notes and Gossip of Amusement World

PLANS FOR THE ENTERTAINMENT of Uncle Sam's soldiery in the nine training camps in and around Washington are beginning to take definite shape.

At yesterday's luncheon meeting of one of the subcommittees of the District of Columbia Council of Defense, at the Raleigh, tentative steps were taken for the holding of auditions of those who feel themselves competent to provide "big-time" diversion for the boys in uniform. The purpose is eventually to organize nine touring units to play the camps in rotation, after the manner of traveling "road companies." The primary requirement is that the applicants be capable of providing real entertainment and not something that will look like a "get-the-hook" amateur night at Alfalfa Corners.

GARY COOPER

Actively engaged in this enterprise are many of the foremost representatives of amateur and semiprofessional acting groups in the Capital—including Denis Connell, Sybil Baker, Father Hartke, Lee Butler and numerous others—and the drama desks of the local press. Schooled in the ways of the theater and presumably cognizant of talent when they see it, they will act with the board of judges at the auditions, with a view to eliminating those who are not quite up to the rigors of "touring" and assuring entertainment that will be worth any spectator's time and trouble—if the soldiery has either time or "trouble" in these emergency days.

To get this thing rolling at the earliest possible date, application blanks are now available between the hours of 9 a. m. and 7 p. m., at Room 500, District Building, Fourteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue, for those wishing to perform before the men serving under arms. Place and dates of the auditions will be announced through the daily press as soon as the number of applications warrants it. It is the hope of those in charge that the auditions may be put under way within the next two weeks. So now is the time for all good singers, dancers, comedians, actors, entertainers, etc., to come to the aid of the parties drilling by day and craving entertainment by night. And make it snappy!

Busting an Old Bugaboo

There may have been a time when motion picture entertainment sagged to a pretty low level during the summer months, but the loewcal Loew interests will argue you blue in the face that that is a condition which long since has been kicked over the heart. Maybe they're right, with what they have in sight for their F Street screens.

Barging right along in the wake of "They Met in Bombay" and "Moon Over Miami," for instance, will come Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Technicolor production of "Blossoms in the Dust," costarring Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon; Andy Hardy and the rest of his celebrated family in "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," with Judy Garland and Patricia Dane added to Master Rooney's usual family circle; Ann Sothern in "Ringside Maisie" and Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day, "Red" Skelton and Nils Asther in "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Day"—meaning, we hope, Laraine. Two of M.-G.-M.'s special "specials" will be the multi-starred "When Ladies Meet," with Joan Crawford, Greer Garson, Robert Taylor and Herbert Marshall, and "Red" Skelton, Ann Rutherford, Virginia Grey, Conrad Veidt and "Rags" Ragland in "Whistling in the Dark."

From Twentieth Century-Fox will come Jack Benny in "Charley's Aunt" and Cesar Romero and Carole Landis in "Dance Hall." Paramount will chip in with its Technicolor "Shepherd of the Hills," with John Wayne, Betty Field and Harry Carey. So what is there to worry about?

Your Only Chance Until 1942

As stated here yesterday, the drama desks are winging up to New York today to see "Sergeant York," because that is the only way it can be seen prior to the Earle's gala inaugural on Thursday night, July 31, and the joint run of the picture at both the Earle and Ambassador theaters, beginning the next morning, under a policy that previously has been set forth here. But what the public ought to be more interested in is the fact that "Sergeant York," hailed as one of the great pictures of all time, will not be given general release until some time in 1942. Upon the completion of the few "road show" engagements of the picture starring Gary Cooper in the role of the Tennessee hero—in which Washington is fortunate enough to be included—the film will be withdrawn from circulation until next year. If you don't see it at the Earle or Ambassador, you won't see it all until then.

Following the final showing of Jack London's "Mutiny of the Elsinore" tonight, patrons of the Little Theater will be privileged to sit in at a preview screening of "There's Magic in Music," at no extra charge. Allan Jones and Susanna Foster are costars of the picture, which utilizes the famous music camp at Interlochen, Mich., as its background.

When some authentic natives of the South Seas asked for work in Paramount's production of "Aloma of the South Seas," starring Dorothy Lamour, they got it. Zorina Has Second Fling At the Films

By Charles R. Moore

Hollywood, July 21 (AP).—Presenting Zorina, a girl who speaks five languages, counts in Norwegian, dreams in English and dances like a million dollars in any language.

The full name is Vera Zorina, now. Once it was Brigitta Hartwig. She acquired her professional name because all members of the Russian ballet had to have Russian names and it was the only one of a suggested list she could pronounce. She didn't like the Vera part and prefers just Zorina.

She is in Hollywood for the best reason anyone could be here, to play in the movies. Specifically, the film version of the Broadway hit, "Louisiana Purchase," for Paramount.

Hollywood is a great place, she thinks, but she was surprised to find so many actors and actresses, on and off the screen, and more surprised that most of them go around talking to themselves.

"Sometimes I find myself doing it," she said. "I was driving to the studio the other morning and thinking about my lines. Suddenly I caught myself saying half aloud, over and over again, 'First we sell the milk, then we sell the cow. First we sell the milk, then we sell the cow. First we . . .' and so on. People must have thought I was a little crazy. That's what I thought when I saw someone else doing it."

So There Was No Swim

Zorina told about life in Hollywood during lunch at her Brentwood home. Lunch for the dancer consisted of two lamb chops and a tomato salad. She said she doesn't have to worry much about her figure but there's no point in asking for bulges.

Zorina lives here with her mother, Mrs. Fritz Hartwig. Her husband, George Ballanchine, choreographer, is on tour with a dance troupe.

After lunch she suggested a swim in her back-yard pool, but your correspondent, who isn't used to back-yard swimming pools, had neglected to bring his short pants and the best Zorina could offer was an old ballet skirt.

Zorina's ballet skirts were not designed for copy-desk hips. She is about 5 feet 4, slim but shapely and tanned from sunbaths.

Her costume today was white shorts with a white blouse and a wide belt of heavy leather.

Zorina was born in Berlin, spent her childhood in Norway, and has lived and danced in all the major European cities. She went to ballet school when she was a child and at 17 was enrolled in Col. de Basil's Ballet Russe.

New York, July 21.

BOOK DEPARTMENT: Jay Allen, the American correspondent who was arrested in occupied France and who is being exchanged for the Nazi newspapermen now on board the West Point, had little reading matter with which to idle away his time during his incarceration . . . His captors finally presented him with a copy of "Gone With the Wind," published in French . . . Allen read it carefully and then sent word that he had one complaint about the book: "It's too short."

WILLIAM C. FIELDS

POLITICS DEPARTMENT: Last week, at the home of John Gunther, George Jean Nathan observed a group of correspondents who have been abroad recently—Duranty, Taylor, Gunther, Louis Fischer, Dorothy Thompson, Joe Barnes and others—argue about the current crisis . . . "What we need at this moment," said Nathan, "is someone who's spent the last three years in Indiana."

LOCAL NEWS: City councilman Al Smith, jr., is abandoning his hopes for becoming a candidate for higher office. Smith is a reserve officer and is being assigned to one of the training camps . . . Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy may step down from the bench and resume his old job of Attorney General . . . Three Hollywood talent scouts arrived last week to bid for the services of Nadine Gae, the "Panama Hattie" dancer . . . Tommy Corcoran's brother, David Corcoran, now is head of the China War Aid Corporation

DRAMA DEPARTMENT: Eddie Cantor will return to Broadway next fall in a musical comedy to be called "Banjo Eyes" . . . It will be an adaptation of "Three Men on a Horse," the Cecil Holm-George Abbott comedy which was a Broadway hit five years ago.

MOVIES DEPARTMENT: The next W. C. Fields picture, "Never Give a Sucker an Even Break," will introduce a new practice to the motion picture field. All the characters in that movie will be referred to by their real names . . . Fields' name in the picture will be W. C. Fields, Gloria Jean will be called Gloria Jean and Franklyn Pangborn will be called Franklyn Pangborn . . . "This is a better way," Fields insisted. "After all, in using different names we weren't fooling anybody."

EMPLOYMENT DEPARTMENT: On the stage of Loew's State Ted Lewis will do the 50,000th performance of his long career. When this fact was announced in the newspapers Lewis received a phone call at his home. The caller said that he was a newspaperman and asked, "Is it true that you'll give your 50,000th performance?" . . . "Yes, that's true," the band leader assured him . . . "How can you prove that?" the caller demanded . . . "Well, if you're skeptical I can count the monthly pay checks I wrote for my band during the last 30 years," Lewis explained, "then multiply them by seven, for the number of days in the week, and, with the midweek fraction added, I'll get 50,000" . . . "Go ahead," the skeptic replied. "I'll wait."

REALTY DEPARTMENT: Gertrude Niesen, whose mother bought for her the $3,000,000 Oelrichs estate in Newport at auction this week, was asked last night about the reason for this acquisition . . . "People have different whims.. Just as some people like to put a $2 bet on a horse—my mother likes to buy a house," Miss Niesen confessed. "After all, many people are horse-crazy. We're just house-crazy."

SPORTS DEPARTMENT: Sam Goldwyn, who has purchased the movie rights to the life of Lou Gehrig, requested Lynn Farnol to see the night ball game at Ebbets Field this week as the first step in the adaptation of the biography . . . "But what," Farnol was asked, "has a night ball game in the National League to do with the life story of an American League champion?" . . . "We're quite thorough in our preparation," Farnol smiled. "And so we went to Ebbetts Field to find out, for ourselves, whether in every ball game there are at least nine innings."

ARMY DEPARTMENT: George Jessel's father-in-law—who will become a grandfather on October 3—has been elevated from the rank of private and now is a sergeant . . . Jessel, who entertained the soldiers in the last war, was one of a large group of screen stars who recently entertained 40,000 soldiers in a camp in California. The movie director in charge of the show had prepared scripts, in which the appearances of Jack Benny, Marlene Dietrich, Rochester and others were timed to the split second. When they arrived, however, the director discovered that the show was 15 minutes late in starting . . . "Can you go out there and talk to the soldiers until we get the show ready?" the director asked Jessel . . . "Of course," said George, who has been addressing audiences for more than 30 years . . . "How long do you think you can talk to them?" asked the nervous director . . . "Offhand," said George, "until October 16."

—HEDDA HOPPER—

Love for George Washington

Hollywood, Calif., July 21. Don't want to start a stampede on Paramount, but there's an actor in town that's got a good job if Director Blumenthal can find him. He has a picture of the guy made up like George Washington and so perfect it looks like the Gilbert Stuart painting. He found it in the casting department without a name attached, and has scouts now ransacking the town for the guy, whom he wants for the Washington role in "The Remarkable Andrew." All right, Dick, I'll give—the man's name is Montagu Love.

ROSALIND RUSSELL

Isn't this just like Hollywood? Don Ameche, who sings, doesn't—but Roz Russell, who doesn't, will warble a song called "Jealousy" in their present picture . . . Jimmy Stewart, on leave, took a sailor's holiday and visited every set at Metro. When Clark Gable asked, "What's your rating now?" Jimmy said, "The Government's made a special concession. I'm still a corporal!"

Director Reinhold Schunzel's new picture is called "Strange Victory." He's just had one in his own private life. When the S. S. Villa Madrid, which ordinarily holds 225 passengers, landed in New York from Lisbon with 700 refugees, the director's 84-year-old mother, two sisters, a brother-in-law and a niece were aboard. They're now en route to Hollywood.

One of the sights of the weekend was Frank Morgan, who's spent hundreds of dollars for fishing tackle. He was hooking his son, who acted as dive-in for a marlin, in his own swimming pool . . . Ann Sothern has pictures proving that she caught a 259-pounder over the weekend, and so has Warren William. His was a little under Annie's weight. Most of Jessie Ralph's friends didn't know she'd been ill. Now that she's on the mend, we can mention it.

Yesterday on Garbo's set, which was a crowded section of a railroad train with dozens of extras, a stray cat mixed with the crowd and became frightened. The only one who wasn't frightened was Garbo, who went after it, picked it up, and carried it off the set to safety. Incidentally, Connie Bennett, who's worked in that picture three days, hasn't yet seen Garbo.

Mickey Rooney's newest romance is Carol Bruce, late of "Louisiana Purchase" . . . RKO tried to borrow George Raft for "The Mayor of Forty-fourth Street," which part fits him like a glove. Warners are trying to rewrite "All Through the Night" to his order. At the present moment anything can happen.

It isn't every writer who can get a star like Katharine Hepburn to sell a story for him. But that's what Katie did for Ring Lardner, jr., and Garson Kanin's brother, Mike. Incidentally, Katie sat in on story conferences and put in her oar, and it must have been a strong one—the boys got the highest price paid for an original in ten years.

Laura Hope Crews, back from Chicago on six weeks' leave from "Arsenic and Old Lace," tells me she loved doing the play but for weeks thermometer never dove under 96. She has nothing but praise for Howard Lindsey and Russell Crouse, who are up to their ears finding a new play for her on Broadway next fall.

Director Al Hall, who bought a turkey ranch years ago, has been trying for ages to get those turkeys in a picture. The nearest he came to it was a shot of "Mr. Jordan" which he took from across the road. Now I'll darned if he hasn't written in a farm sequence in "Bedtime Story," and it looks as though he'd get a picture of Cary Grant feeding the birds.

It didn't take John Houseman long to recognize the worth of Jessie Busley. Charles Frohman used to call her his box-office insurance policy. Jessie will play the role Marie Dressler made famous in "Anna Christie" at Santa Barbara, with Ingrid Bergman.

Soothing Massage Nearly Ruins Star

George Tobias chalks up the oddest cause for hospital treatment on record.

The Warner Brothers actor was put under heat lamps to cure severe bruises caused by a massage—designed to ease bruises.

Tobias was massaged for steam bath scenes in "Out of the Fog." The treatment, delivered on a massage table by a husky attendant, was given just hard enough to register on the sensitive microphone.

But the massage went on all day long before the scenes were completed.

15 Policemen Are Sworn In At Rockville

Fifteen policemen were sworn in yesterday by Clerk of the Court Clayton K. Watkins at Rockville, Md., bringing the Montgomery County Police Department to the largest number in its history. One policeman scheduled to be sworn yesterday failed to arrive, Taylor Cantwell. He had been drafted into the Army.

The new policemen were assigned to school for two weeks under tutelage of Sergt. James S. McAuliffe, who yesterday became second in command of the newly organized county detective bureau.

The men will be given lessons in interviewing prisoners and witnesses, making notes, proper methods of obtaining evidence, methods of preparing the records required by the department and will be given instruction in their legal rights and the rights of the public.

A course in firearms and machine-gun practice also will be included.

Chief of Police Andrew M. Newman officially opened the school and told the men he would back them when they were right and would expect them to support him in making the department record the best in the history of the county.

Other changes in the county force became effective yesterday. Lieut. Leroy Rodgers assumed command of Bethesda substation, with Sergt. Joseph B. Nolte as second in command. Lieut. Earl H. Burdine became commanding officer at headquarters station in Rockville, with Sergt. Roy Bodmer second in command. Lieut. D. L. Snyder is in command of Silver Spring substation, with Corpl. Charles Barnes as second in command. Corpl. George Windham was ordered transferred to Takoma Park as senior officer under command of the Silver Spring substation.

The county's new detective bureau took shape on paper yesterday, with Detective Lieut. Theodore F. Vollten in command and Sergt. McAuliffe as second, but actual transfer of the new detective corporals awaits completion of the school and assignment of the new men to stations.

County Chief Tosses The First Aluminum

Montgomery County's aluminum collection campaign got under way yesterday with start of a house-to-house canvass to urge citizens to contribute old aluminum.

Collection points have been named throughout the county, a list of these being posted at each police station. Largest and most ambitious collection station was that at Bethesda firehouse, which sports a Liberty Bell to be rung by those who contribute to the collection, an exhibit of airplane wings and propeller parts and a display of American flags. The exhibit was prepared by the firemen under direction of Chief A. J. Bargagni, Bethesda chairman.

In Silver Spring a wire basket has been erected at Georgia Avenue and Bonifant Street. County Commissioner O. W. Roby tossed in the first aluminum pan to start the collection and William F. Carlin, chairman of the business men's committee, also tossed in a large piece of aluminum, forerunner of a large quanity being gathered by the business men of the community.

Alfred D. Noyes, county chairman, announced that Henry Hiser, proprietor of the State Theater in Bethesda, had joined with the Sidney Lust theaters of the county in announcing an aluminum matinee at which admission to a special show will be purchased with a piece of aluminum.

Officials Lay Cornerstone

The cornerstone of the Hecht Co.'s new five-story building in the 600 block E Street Northwest was mortared into place yesterday by Charles B. Dulcan, sr., vice president and general manager of the concern. Sealed inside were a copy of President Roosevelt's emergency proclamation, copies of Washington newspapers, a map and photograph of the District, and United States coins.

Officers and employes from every department of the company took part in the ceremonies at the new edifice, which will connect with the present building and will be ready for opening by early fall.

After the mortar had been spread by Dulcan, the silver trowel used was presented to him by M. S. Hecht, chairman of the board of the Hecht stores in Baltimore and Washington.

Funeral Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Benet

Funeral services for Mrs. Margaret Cox Benet, 76, prominently known both here and abroad for her interest in charitable work, will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at St. John's Church. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

MRS. BENET

Mrs. Benet was taken ill on July 14 in Rochester, N. Y., while en route with her husband, Laurence V. Benet, to the Adirondack Mountains. She did not regain consciousness and died Sunday.

Mrs. Benet was born in the old Robinson mansion in Georgetown which later became the Dunbarton Club. She was married here December 20, 1899, and lived for 41 years in Paris with her husband, the honorary president La Societe Hotchkiss & Cie. While abroad, Mrs. Benet was well known as a hostess, and during the first World War she served on the staff of the American Ambulance Corps and with a refugee relief association.

In recognition of her services, she was awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor and Rosette of Officer of the Legion of Honor—one of the few women ever to receive the latter decoration. She later became vice president of the French League for Prevention of Cancer.

Returning to Washington, Mrs. Benet became active in relief work and a leading figure in efforts to aid French refugees in England.

Mrs. Benet lived at 2101 Connecticut Avenue.

Besides her husband, she is survived by four sisters, Mrs. Eveleth Whiting, Mrs. L. W. Glazebrook and Mrs. Charles Hume, all of Washington, and Mrs. Steuart W. Jackson, of Montclair, N. J., and a brother, William Robinson Cox, of Montclair, also survives.

Former Rep. Amlie Seeks Bolles' Seat

Madison, Wis., July 21 (AP).—Former Representative Thomas Amlie, of Elkhorn, twice a member of Congress as a Progressive, filed nomination papers as a Democrat today for the Congressional seat vacated by the death of the late Representative Stephen Bolles, First District Republican.

State Senator Kenneth L. Greenquist, who was said to have the backing of the LaFollette Progressive noninterventionist faction, was the lone Progressive filing.

Amlie will have opposition in the August 8 primary from Bernard F. Magruder, of Racine. Republicans filing were George R. Cady, of Kenosha; Gordon T. Whittet, of Edgerton; B. M. Engebretson, of Beloit; Glenn W. Birkett, of Burlington, and Harvey C. Hansen, Lawrence H. Smith and R. G. Harvey, all of Racine.

A special election will be held August 26.

Husband Ordered to Pay Back Alimony

Three years of litigation ended late yesterday in the United States Court of Appeals when a husband was adjudged in contempt of court for failing to pay alimony.

The husband, found guilty of contempt, is George A. Brown, 55, a Mount Rainier electrician, who last September was ordered to pay his estranged wife, Mrs. Mary Estelle Brown, temporary alimony of $108 a month.

Three judges of the Court of Appeals ordered the husband to pay his wife $575 in back alimony at once, with the balance of $500 due in 60 days. If this payment is made, Brown "shall stand purged of his contempt," the Court stated.

However, if he fails to make payment, the Court ordered that he be arrested and held "until such time as he shall purge himself of his contempt, or until the further order of the Court." Future alimony payments were reduced to $12.50 per week.

The decision was handed down by Judges Stephens, Vinson and Rutledge. Judge Stevens dissented, stating that Brown was not guilty of contempt and that the September order to pay alimony was invalid.

The Browns' domestic troubles have been in the courts since July 8, 1938, when the husband filed for divorce. Mrs. Brown denied the charges and filed a countersuit. Both cases were dismissed, and last June 5, Mrs. Brown filed a new suit for separate maintenance. This suit also was dismissed.

Last September the Court of Appeals ordered Brown to pay his wife temporary alimony. Brown's refusal resulted in yesterday's decision.

Seamless Hosiery Minimum Pay Set

Administrator Philip B. Fleming of the Wage-Hour Division of the Labor Department yesterday ordered a 36-cent minimum wage for the seamless hosiery industry, effective September 15.

The industry employs about 62,000 persons, the division said, and since 1939 has been operating under a 32½-cent-per-hour minimum wage order. It was estimated that 27,500 of the total workers in the industry were earning less than 36 cents an hour at present.

New Commissioner

President Roosevelt acted with commendable promptness in filling the vacancy on the District Board of Commissioners created by the death of Melvin C. Hazen. Although the appointee, Guy Mason, has only twice before been identified with public affairs, on both occasions for relatively brief intervals, he has been a resident of the District for 37 years, has had a varied career as newspaperman, soldier, surveyor and lawyer, and enjoys the warm regard of all who know him. The public, to be sure, know little about Mr. Mason. But, because of his long residence here, Mr. Mason's interest in the welfare of this voteless community can be taken for granted. That he plans to enter on his new job with "no policies planned . . . no commitments . . . no obligations" is in his favor. The problems facing the District have never been more difficult than at present, with Washington bulging at the seams as a result of a vast influx of new residents summoned here to serve the Government for the emergency. Mr. Mason and his fellow Commissioners will need the help of the people of Washington. They, in turn, will look to him and to his colleagues to serve them as ably and energetically as they know how. And both the people and the Commissioners need the cooperation of Congress, our real governing body, to make the District the safe, healthful, well-governed city the Nation's Capital ought to be but not always is.

Oil Pinch

A correspondent comments caustically on the talk of gasless Sundays for Americans when thousands of barrels of oil are being shipped to Japan through the port of Los Angeles. It is a strange and undoubtedly an irritating coincidence that we should have oil to spare for an aggressor nation at a time when the Atlantic Coast States are being urged by Secretary Ickes to reduce oil consumption. However, to cut Japan off from access to our oil supplies would not help the Eastern Seaboard. For the Eastern problem is not caused by a lack of oil in producing areas, but by the transfer to Great Britain of 50 out of 260 tankers engaged in carrying oil from Gulf to Atlantic ports. Since tankers normally transport about 95 per cent of the oil shipped to the East Coast, this is a serious loss. And the loss is further accentuated by the fact that the demand for oil is rising rapidly, with the result that stocks are not being currently built up at the rate necessary to meet the coming, much heavier, winter demand. Moreover, the shortage may presently become acute in view of further diversions of tankers to supply Britain with fuel for her ships and planes.

There is no question, therefore, about the need for drastic curtailment of oil consumption in the areas serviced by tankers. Indeed, Mr. Ickes warns that rationing of petroleum products may become necessary unless his recent appeal to the Atlantic Coast States for voluntary cuts of at least one-third in consumption is heeded. Mr. Ickes' warning is not an idle threat, as shown by his requests to Eastern oil companies to report weekly all sales of motor fuel to dealers as well as sales made through their own service stations. By such means it will be possible to determine the volume and trend of retail purchases and find out whether voluntary curtailment has been effective. There is a strong suspicion that the showing will be disappointing, and that some kind of compulsory rationing of oil will follow.

Rationing—especially if it meant gasless weekends—would, of course, entail loss of income to many resort towns and communities that depend largely upon automobile tourist patronage. That is unfortunate, but it may be essential. For large amounts of gasoline could unquestionably be released for emergency use by cutting down pleasure driving. Although the automobile is not a luxury in this motor-driven age, a very large percentage of the mileage traveled by car owners is for pleasure rather than for profit. That is shown by a study of automobile uses recently published by the American Automobile Manufacturers Association. In Connecticut, for instance, business mileage constituted 54 per cent of the total mileage; in New York the corresponding figure was 56 per cent, rising to 64 per cent in Virginia and 71 per cent in Maryland.

Thus it would appear that the mere elimination of strictly pleasure driving would cut gasoline consumption to figures that should satisfy Mr. Ickes. Just how that is to be done is, of course, a far from easy question to answer. But if voluntary saving of gasoline fails to get satisfactory results, compulsory rationing is the only feasible alternative. And it will have to come very soon. The temper of this country, we are sure, is such as to persuade the people, first, that Britain's resistance is part of the defense of our country, and, secondly, that there is no sacrifice in foregoing pleasure driving if the sacrifice will bolster up Britain's resistance.

Appeal To Reason

Theodore Roosevelt used to say that in the final analysis he always relied upon the common sense of the American people. President Roosevelt appeals to that same common sense in his message to Congress on the extension of the selectees' period of service. There is a clarity and a cogency in his statement which make the President's case incontrovertible. Yet there seems bound to be a bitter, if not a long, debate in Congress. It is for this reason that Mr. Roosevelt took measures which would bring his message simultaneously into the households of the Nation as well as the halls of Congress. There should be no doubt about the outcome after the logic of this message has been weighed by the American people.

The merit of the Presidential request springs to the eyes in the light of its context. Over the entire world the forces of aggression have been loosed in a raging conflict that is sweeping the world. Hitler has occupied the entire continent of Europe. He has a foothold in Asia, another in Africa. Only the Russian campaign separates him from a power which is staggering in its dimensions. What is to frustrate him, after Russia has been added to his empire, from taking possession of the approaches to this hemisphere? Nothing—except the power of the United States. And yet, at this critical period in world history, two-thirds of our Army are due for demobilization, and the absurdity of such an event has to be argued. Only a Lewis Carroll could do justice to the inherent nonsense of the situation.

For the demobilization would show the world that the United States was more interested in bringing on chaos within its own borders than in defending them. The selectees at the end of a year of service would only be half-trained. They would break up the Army organization, since the regulars have been brigaded with the selectees. No government worthy of the name could tolerate such a disorganization. It has been suggested, however, that we cannot help ourselves, in view of the "promise" that was made to the selectees at the time of enlistment. As if a government can contract away its right of self-defense! The American people are too right-minded to be deluded by an argument which is as specious in its reasoning as it is invalid on the highest grounds of our common welfare.

In point of fact, no broken contract is called for. The Selective Service Act provided that "whenever Congress has declared that the national interest is imperilled, such twelve-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary for the national defense." Accordingly the President has asked Congress to make such a declaration. Some of the diehards may see in this request a test of the President's foreign policies. But the national emergency is a thing apart from those policies. The emergency recognized a plain indubitable fact. Whether there is agreement on the President's foreign policies or not, no question can arise that an emergency has been thrust upon the United States by the circling menace of Axis aggression. What we should do about the aggression is another problem. But certainly demobilization of the selectees is no answer; and it would be illogical to connect a vote against demobilization with interventionism.

President Roosevelt rightly stresses the effect of any demobilization upon the nations of this hemisphere. Those nations are now banded with us in a concert which is the bulwark of our defense. They have less of a sense of security than we have. And as soon as Hitler appears on the approaches to the southern part of this hemisphere, they will look to this Nation for their defense. Thus the spectacle of demobilization when Hitler is moving closer to this hemisphere would fill them with a fear that we did not mean business. It would make our words meaningless to a score of republics, and the pro-Nazi element would be able to garner the harvest. For if we don't act as if we mean what we say, the Latin-American republics would have no option but to canvass ways and means of getting aboard the new Hitler bandwagon. We refuse, however, to think that there is any danger that we shall provoke them to such a course. If, as somebody has said, the reserves of apathy in the American people cannot be overestimated, neither can their reserves of common sense.

The "Churchill"

British factories are now producing a new heavy tank, appropriately named the Churchill, which the ministry of supply claims is "probably the most formidable fighting instrument possessed by any army in the world." As to why it should be the most formidable the ministry is pleasantly vague. Reticence serves a dual purpose, of course. It keeps the Nazis guessing and, therefore, is in effect a British adaptation of the scare technique occasionally employed by the Germans to worry the enemy. More important, it prevents the Nazis from devising an adequate tank defense, for the construction details of the Churchill are naturally secret.

Since the British boast of the Churchill's superior performance, they obviously think pretty highly of its firepower, mobility and armor—tank essentials. In the past it has proved impossible to combine all three satisfactorily. Tanks built for speed and mobility have sacrificed armor protection. And tanks possessing great firepower and good protection have generally been slow. Some of the Russian heavy tanks, for instance, travel only 6 to 10 miles an hour, which makes them of distinctly secondary importance in blitz warfare. Nazi heavy tanks, also in the 60 to 80 ton category, are faster, but lack the concentrated firepower claimed for the Churchill. We have no heavy tanks, though a 60-ton model, heavily armed, will soon be ready for testing. Whether its mobility and armor protection will measure up to or surpass that of its British counterpart is, of course, a matter of conjecture.

It is a truism of warfare, however, that whenever a new or improved weapon makes its appearance, a new defense follows very shortly. The British doubtless know just the antidote to stop the Churchill dead in its tracks—but they are not telling. If and when the Nazis are confronted by wave after wave of Churchills advancing relentlessly, they, too, may have an antidote ready. But unless they succeed in gaining advance information about the British tank, the chances are they will not. And in that future and hopeful circumstance all that the British claim for the Churchill may be gloriously affirmed.

Well-Timed Warning

Whether Hitler's Russian time table has gone awry or not, the fact remains that the situation on the far-flung eastern front, after four weeks of intense fighting, provides no occasion for optimism either in Great Britain or the United States. It would be foolish in the extreme to assume that the Nazis will not sooner or later achieve their objective, namely, the smashing of the Red army. Nor can it be assumed that Russian resistance, the intensity of which has surprised the world, will continue indefinitely. That is why it would be well for the American people to give close heed to the pointed warning of Mr. Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, that Germany, though still knee-deep in the Russian conflict, is nevertheless planning new aggressions.

Just where Hitler will attack next, when and if the Soviet Union has been placed hors de combat, is, of course, a secret locked in the megalomaniac brain of the Fuehrer. But a glance at the map suggests that one very real possibility may be a drive to take over West Africa, and from bases there to intensify German efforts to cut Britain's Atlantic lifeline, and our own line of supplies to the fighting British, and then to create an aerial link between German Europe and South America. Against such a possible development, the danger of which to the peace and security of the Western Hemisphere needs no emphasis, the United States must guard itself. We must be prepared to act and act quickly. For when Hitler strikes he strikes without warning. To assume that because Nazi Germany happens, for the time being, to be busily engaged elsewhere, the eastern approaches to the Western Hemisphere are safe is to play into Hitler's hands.

TRANSIENT

Her step is light, she leaves no trail through the grass,
Less than a wake through water.
Do not seek to snare her feet as they pass:
She is the wind's daughter.

She will not notice the nestlings as she goes,
Or young fruit on the trees,
But the feel of feathers against her breast she knows,
Young apples her wild heart sees.

And if she is careless of storm, she is not brave;
And giving, not free of heart.
She will not fear for the fruit she may not have,
Nor keep what was lost from the start.

No Selectees

It is a shame that preparation was not made for some sort of revolving recruiting plan which would have taken up the slack caused by completion of service of those selectees who were called up for military training for a year. A plan could have been made. The situations which the Federal Administration contend make it necessary to extend the one-year-limit of selectees now held in the military service were not made by the selectee. They were maneuvers out of his control. Still the young men were called out of colleges and high schools and places of employment for service on the pretext that they were to serve but one year. They forsook studies which would have advanced their education or they gave up jobs which were profitable or were of some recompense to relatives in need of support. Some of the boys responded reluctantly, others voluntarily; still both in their moods they were patriotic. They accepted military training at $21 for the first four months—$30 a month thereafter and stuck it out for the period while other men struck at their jobs and held up production for defense. Were I the President, I would make a direct appeal to the selectees. I would ask them, as man to man, just like a buck sergeant would call upon the mechanic to work overtime on the repair of the sputtering engine of the bombing plane after the post siren had sounded and announced the close of another day in the lives of the men of the Army, "Buddy, I know how you feel: you feel just as eager as I do to quit when the siren has blown. But look at that engine. Just a little more time on it would put it in shape—and you know, Buddy, this is an emergency, and we may need that one ship before dawn. And you, buddy, are the only man who can fix that engine. What do you say we both stick around a while longer until the job we started out to do is finished?"

Yes, I can sympathize with the feelings of these boys who are married or single with a widowed parent or a grandmother or an aunt, perhaps sharing their predicament, back home. I know how they feel. I am not speaking for the young men who volunteered for the duration—he knows what to expect. But I am writing about the lad who expected to return to civilian life to take up school work or that job at the office or in the workshop. Or to go back to housekeeping with the "Mrs." as well. That's the boy who needs the sympathy and the encouragement of all of us who would like to be keeping in step with him today.

Planning Board

It will be our industrial leaders' fault, and not the President's, if Hitler catches us with our plants down. For it is due to lack of coordinated control by the Government that defense production has not proceeded more smoothly, and that domestic affairs have been in such a condition for the last nine years.

Discipline and planning in industry should be just as important as it is in the Army, and the captains of industry should be expected to obey the same as the captains of troops. Throughout the world economic systems are being more and more regulated by the state. One reason is that success in modern warfare depends largely on planning and teamwork behind the lines.

I think that a national planning board should be created, with control over all industry. Its duty should be to plan ahead the quantities to be manufactured and assign to each concern a quota, which should be based on the concern's productive machinery. When a company failed to produce its full quota it should be fined, and these fines should be in proportion to the degree of failure.

Under this plan there would be a better balance between defense production and goods for the public, and necessary adjustments could be easily made to keep this balance; also more goods of each type could be manufactured.

While there would be less margin for the producer, there would likewise be less risk, and he would get a more satisfactory aggregate profit on his higher total volume.

We Beg Off

I have read "My Sister and I," books on aviation adventures, letters to the President, speeches and remarks by Cabinet officers, and it seems to add up like this: Here, take our resignation, we do not care to fight. We have no stomach to oppose the armored Nazi might. We do not care for England, and we think she cannot win. But we don't talk about that now, for fighting is a sin. We're really good Americans, we should not be abused, but if we must defend our shores, we beg to be excused. We may fly a plane for prizes, and for glory we may thirst, but if Americans must die, WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST. MY KITTEN AND I.

Gangsters

Not long ago that great country—Russia—with her estimated four-and-one-half million army pounced upon little Finland with massacre and destruction. The press was full of praise for the way the courageous Finns defended their country against such an overwhelming foe. The perfidy of Russia in stealing a slice of Finland shocked the world. Now Russia, which has murdered off her best generals, is attacked by an army of several millions—not a little Finnish band defending herself this time, and she is having an excellent chance to see how it feels to be invaded by as ruthless a foe as she herself has been to other helpless nations! She is being paid in her own coin. It is little wonder that Finland, whom she might have had as an ally, now sides with Germany. Any country that would stoop to such perfidy as Russia has been guilty of does not deserve an ally. If she now needs help, with her immense army and over half a million tanks to fight with, let England help her.

The best thing that could happen now is that both armies would annihilate each other, then the world would be rid of two great war machines which have planned the destruction of other governments.

Any nation, to whom honor is a stranger, deserves nothing but extermination. The world will never know a continued peace until such organized gangsters are exterminated.

Oh, Mr. Cox!

On page 28 of The Post of July 15, under "Private Lives," by Edwin Cox, I find a paragraph headed "Talent, Inc.," which reads as follows:

"One early edition of Hans Christian Andersen's books carried a sketch of the author by a young Danish artist who's now a famous movie and radio star—Jean Hersholt."

Is Mr. Cox writing fairy tales too? Or is Jean Hersholt a nonagenarian, a centenarian, or perhaps a sesquicentenarian? On referring to an encyclopedia I find that Hans Christian Andersen was born in 1805 (136 years ago), and died in 1875. It was in the year 1835 (106 years ago) that the first installment of his famous Fairy Tales appeared. Two more volumes appeared in 1847 and 1848, and "they continued to appear, in installments, until 1872, when, at Christmas, the last stories were published." CHARLES H. PROBERT.

What Invasion?

We of the armed services are getting a little sick of all this screaming about invasion by Hitler both by completely uninformed civilians and by people who should know better. So far as I can see, no one except Mr. John T. Flynn has bothered to look into the facts and figures of an invasion attempt by Hitler. We wish to refer your whole reading public to Mr. Flynn's penetrating article, "Can Hitler Invade America?" in the April issue of the Readers Digest.

Psalm XCI

May I suggest to Secretary Knox, Gen. Marshall, and other heads of the Administration that they read and ponder Psalm 91 in the Bible, also spend at least six hours on their knees in prayer and meditation beseeching God's guidance on the conduct of affairs in this country of ours? It is imperative that they do so now. From the present trend of affairs God has been completely erased from the picture. To be afraid is to have more faith in evil than in God. Psalm XCI studied carefully will solve many difficulties.

The Weak Spot In Our Defense

Perhaps the authorities are able to view with indifference the pro-Axis sentiments of selects who send telegrams reaffirming the selects' loyalty to the Government, but at the same time asserting that "We, as one man, believe that the greater part of the present emergency exists in the minds of warmongers in Washington and not in the actual state of affairs." If selects actually believe this, they are either very stupid, or very clever pawns in the hands of Axis agents. The fate of former democratic nations in Europe would lead us to believe that Hitler is serious in his intentions to conquer both England and America.

The appeasement boys are clever propagandists. They are more clever than the Administration because they have more to offer. The appeasement boys know that America has many social problems unsolved at home. The appeasement boys know that Hitler has won most of his victories by undermining the captured nations with propaganda that reduces each particular nation to a state of mental civil war. Civil and military authority is weakened by the intelligent use of lies and rumors. The desires, prejudices and folkways of peoples are used to prepare the populace for the sudden military blitzkrieg that follows. In America these methods bring results when used within conservative or reactionary organizations, and even patriotic groups have become unconscious pawns of Axis agents.

That the appeasement boys have ventured and succeeded in introducing their revolutionary propaganda within the armed forces of our Nation is alarming and disconcerting to those who believe in the democratic way of life. Obviously there has been a slip. Obviously there is a weak spot in our defense set-up somewhere. Some one, or some group of persons with authority, see to it that Axis agents and propagandists have full freedom to carry on their work. Must America become another France?

Seeing Nellie

My illustrious namesake, George Bernard Shaw and I are not relatives and, as a matter of fact, have but two things in common—our beauty and the fact that we are both vegetarians. I don't know how G. B. S. happened to embrace vegetarianism but I do know how I was converted. It was all on account of Nellie.

I met Nellie in the suburbs of Lowell, Mass., years ago while on an auditing trip for the Government which necessitated a long stay there. Nellie, who had been born and raised on the farm at which I boarded, had the biggest brown eyes I had ever seen in my life and I was immediately attracted to her. With due modesty, I may say that she did not seem averse to my company.

Field auditing for the Government is usually a 24-hour job. During the day the auditor copies records from the accounts which he is auditing and after office hours he wrestles with these figures in an attempt to reconcile them and work out the required reports.

So nights after supper I would sit in the front yard and work on my accounts and Nellie would never be far away. She was restful to me and it was really a help and comfort to me to have her around, although I rarely spoke to her more than three or four times of an evening. I really used to feel lonesome after the farmer had decided that it was time for Nellie to go to bed, and I usually followed in an hour or two.

In time I came to realize that Nellie was very fond of all of the livestock on the farm. Many times I have seen her petting them and sometimes I got a little irked when her liking for their company took her too far away from the tree under which I worked.

But, after a while, it seemed that I saw these animals through Nellie's eyes. No longer were they mere beasts put on earth to satisfy man's craving for fresh meat, but living, breathing things which lived and walked the earth. When I broached this matter to Nellie, she did not utter a sound but just looked at me with the soft, understanding look in her eyes which I had grown to love so much.

I think that my real love for Nellie grew from her appreciation of my poetry. Although my life since the World War had been almost wholly taken up by the unromantic practice of law and accountancy, I had long had the secret ambition for recognition as a poet. I had written many original poems which I felt were very good and some which I believed showed positive indications of genius.

Sometimes I had read my poems to my friends, but, somehow, none had ever appreciated them fully until after the sixth cocktail or just before they asked to borrow money.

The first evening I ventured to read my poems to Nellie I did so with a timidity born of many rebuffs of the past. Before I had finished the first poem, my timidity was gone forever. Nellie was standing there, motionless with interest, and with an understanding look in her big brown eyes which brought me immediate realization that never again need I feel that my poems lacked in feeling and in worth.

Then came a time when I found it necessary to spend several days in Boston on official business. While there my mind would wander back to Lowell and Nellie so many times a day that it was difficult for me to pay full attention to my work. When I went to sleep, I would dream of Nellie and the dreams were always about the same. They would start off nicely enough with me just finishing supper on the farm. Then I would go out to our favorite tree and Nellie would, as usual, be waiting for me with that warm look of fondness that I had come to love in her eyes.

When my work was finished, I would take my poems out of my brief case and read them to the appreciative Nellie until I would finally doze off.

Suddenly, I would seem wide awake with the cold hand of fear clutching at my heart and Nellie not to be seen. At this point in each dream I would really awaken in a cold sweat and would sleep no more that night.

My work in Boston finished, I hurried back to Lowell, arriving there late in the afternoon just as supper was being placed on the table.

The meal that was served that night started off by being one of the finest I have ever eaten. I was as hungry as a wolf and the farmer's wife served me with a steak that was sweet, juicy and tender—a steak that would have won world-wide fame for any Washington restaurant which would and could duplicate it.

I dove in with knife and fork and started to eat my fill. Between bites I turned to the farmer's wife and said: "This is the finest steak I have ever eaten. Where in the world did you get it?"

The farmer's wife turned to me—gazed straight into my eyes for a minute or so and then said: "That's Nellie!"

I have never eaten a mouthful of meat since that time. Even the thought of meat causes me to seem to see Nellie looking down at me with a reproachful look in her big brown eyes.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Battle Of The South Atlantic

IT IS ALMOST CERTAIN that the Nazi conspiracy in Bolivia is ahead of the schedule and was not meant to go off at this time. With Hitler's armies occupied in Russia, with preparations still far from completed in the French Empire, in Spain and in Portugal, this was not the moment for the Nazis to move in South America.

LIPPMANN

The Bolivian affair is evidently a premature explosion, due either to the incompetence of the local conspirators as was the case in the Iraq rebellion, or to good police work on the part of the Bolivian government.

For clearly the time has not quite arrived for overt acts in South America. This is the time, from Hitler's point of view, to organize the rebel conspiracies thoroughly on this side of the ocean and to develop the French, Spanish, and Portuguese base of operations on the other side. For the time to launch the rebellions with a good chance of succeeding will not have come until he is in firm possession of the other side of the Atlantic opposite South America, and able, therefore, not only to send help to the South American rebels but to prevent the United States from interfering with him.

ALTHOUGH COL. LINDBERGH has testified before a Congressional committee that South America could be defended by an air force based on Brazil, it is plain that Hitler does not agree with him. The Nazi plan for the conquest of South America has been made quite clear. On this side of the Atlantic he organizes revolutionary conspiracies to set up Quisling governments. On the other side of the Atlantic, he cajoles and coerces the Vichy government and Gen. Franco and the Portuguese government to prepare for him and to hold for him until he is ready to use them, military bases in the islands and on the coast of Africa.

When the time to act comes, the preparations have been completed on both sides of the Atlantic, rebellion at key points in South America will be accompanied by the cutting of the sea communications between North and South America and by Nazi sea and air reinforcements to the South American rebels. The route from French Africa to South America is much shorter than our route to South America and, with a Quisling government somewhere in South America and bases in Africa, it would be far easier to control. An air base in Brazil could no doubt cause some trouble to the Nazis in the South Atlantic, providing we could send convoys or troop ships and supply ships to hold it. But at best we should be standing on the defensive, not knowing where in the immense reaches of the Americas the blow from without would fall or the rebellion explode from within.

SINCE MAY, that is, since the President's declaration of American policy made it clear that this Government understood the situation, the Axis has been tremendously concerned with the prospect of our breaking up this plan of conquest before the preparations are completed and the general European position is favorable for executing it. Hitler, for reasons which are not fully understood, felt he had to fight Russia before he moved further to the west. Therefore, for the time being, he must work underground in the west—by conspiracy in South America and by infiltration through France, Spain and Portugal—while using every device of diplomacy and propaganda to keep the United States inert and passive and confused.

Thus, in the past few days we have been warned by Portugal, denounced by Gen. Franco, and by Vichy we have been treated to a combination of public warnings and private assurances. The total effect and the total intention is to make us hesitate and pause. For whatever else they prove, one thing is clear from the utterances of Hitler's vassals in western Europe: the Axis is tremendously worried at the prospect of our establishing an advanced naval base, equivalent to Iceland, in the South Atlantic.

WE HAVE BECOME accustomed to speaking of the Battle of the Atlantic as if it consisted solely in keeping open the path from North America to the British Isles. Indubitably this is the crucial battle of the war. But there is also being prepared a Battle of the South Atlantic and this is the crucial battle which will determine the future of South America.

The North Atlantic battle rages on the lines between the great fortress of Britain and the great arsenal of North America. It is a battle which will be won by the stronger forces. But the Battle of the South Atlantic is a different kind of struggle, at least in the opening phases. It may be won by Axis guile and lost by American naivete. For on one side of the South Atlantic are weak and unarmed states which Hitler is seeking to corrode and capture from within; on the other side of the ocean are defeated or exhausted states which he has corroded and captured from within. What he lacks is a base of operations for his sea and air power to exploit the internal invasions and conquests which he is organizing on both sides of the South Atlantic.

What he hopes to accomplish by guile is to take the decisive strategic positions for this battle before the democracies understand the plan of the battle. What he dreads is that the democracies do understand it and that American and British sea power will take a commanding position in the South Atlantic—and thus knock down before it can be established the Nazi bridge extending from Berlin through Vichy to the South American conspirators.

Ecuador-Peru Dispute Viewed Gravely

By Glen Levin Swiggett

Significance Of Border Clash

THE RESURGENT border clash between armed forces of Ecuador and Peru may not, of itself, seem an event of much importance. To most of us, preoccupied with the World War's gigantic conflicts, this South American affair may seem just another Latin-American incident to be settled by Washington like the Nicaragua-Honduras and Haiti-Dominican Republic clashes. And it is quite likely that Washington will now find some face-saving solution, temporarily at least, for this century-old dispute between Ecuador and Peru.

The two representatives of these combatant countries, in Washington in conference with the State Department to this end, earlier showed their friendly understanding of the underlying reasons for the continental policy of the United States. Dr. Viteri Lafronte represented his country, Ecuador, at Washington, and the minister of foreign relations for Peru at the time of the Lima conference in 1938, Dr. Carlos Concha, certainly as an administrator, was not unfriendly to the United States in the face of seemingly irreconcilable divisions at this conference.

TO THE LATIN-AMERICAN mind, however, the grave nature of this conflict was quickly apparent. A feature editorial appeared immediately in El Universal of Mexico. It commented on the war-making character of the conflict that might involve the American continent, with dire results at this time. This sentiment was also expressed July 7 by the Mexican minister of foreign affairs, the first Pan-American government, it is said, to call for immediate settlement of this dispute in accord with Pan-American pacific procedure. But, the editorial says, settlement is not so simple.

Peru, for example, is reported to have declined to accept the proposal of May 8 for negotiated settlement, suggested by the United States-Argentina-Brazil governments, since acceptance would imply doubt of its sovereign rights over the area involved in the dispute.

Another difficulty lies in the fact that, despite a generous response of Latin-American nations at Pan-American conferences to proposals for juridic settlement of disputes, there is really no existing machinery for compulsory settlement other than that of war.

THERE IS NO INTENT in the observations of this article to judge the respective merits of the Peru-Ecuador dispute. Which country provoked the present clash is quite irrelevant. The dispute is not over aggression, but for possession of some 120,000 square miles of jungle borderland that falls away to the east of the Andean crest and lies, roughly speaking, somewhere between two large headwater streams of the Amazon, forming a triangle, the tip of which would make Ecuador a neighbor of Brazil, if the award should be favorable to Ecuador. Border clashes are happening only a little over three degrees west of the recognized frontier of Brazil.

Indemnity-purchase, after the manner of settlement of the Acre territory dispute between Bolivia and Brazil, may be the only permanent peaceful solution of the Ecuador-Peru dispute. The purchase of the Galapagos Islands from Ecuador by the United States, repeatedly emphasized as highly important to this country for reasons of strategy, might well be the first step towards such settlement. With this purchase money in hand, Peru and Ecuador would be in a novel, but favorable bargaining position for subsequent and concluding steps in the settlement of another continental war-provoking boundary dispute.

Geographic and, especially, psychologic factors, including Latin pride and honor, have made exceptionally difficult mutual voluntary concessions on which, as the basis for negotiation, settlement of this dispute must rest, if procedure is to be after the established pattern.

HOW DIFFICULT this has been, and will be, all Latins know. Pride of possession and mystical attachment to lost causes are Ibero-American traits. "To have and to hold" has a different meaning to the Latin mind from what it has generally to the Saxon.

Latin America, therefore, would like to have this dispute between Ecuador and Peru settled, if possible, as Brazil settled her boundary disputes which were, in a sense, Spanish-American disputes, since in the first years of independence, over a century ago, Brazil touched every Spanish-American republic except Chile.

These agreements were under the doctrine of "uti possidetis" or the recognition of boundaries as had been defined and accepted by the crown in the administration of the colonies. This principle was accepted in the treaty of 1777 which established the boundaries of Spain and Portugal in South America. It was recognized as a Spanish-American yardstick in 1810. It was the basis of recognition of the boundaries of these young republics in Bolivar's conferences of the twenties and in the historic Latin-American Conference at Lima in 1847.

THE PERU-ECUADOR boundary dispute is definitely younger, but it has its roots in the same vague background of history and geography. For nearly 300 years Ecuador was known as audiencia, presidencia and, finally, Province of Quito. It was attached, first, to the vice-royalty of Peru and then, much later, to that of New Granada.

After the liberating battle of Pichincha, in 1822, Bolivar claimed and included this province in his republic of Great Colombia, made up of former provinces of the vice-royalty of New Grenada. At that time the Province of Quito was considered merely an Andean province with a small Pacific coastal strip, as now, with outlet on the Gulf of Guayaquil. A map for Spanish America in 1825 does not, therefore, show this province. After withdrawal from Bolivar's Colombia it emerges, however, as the Republic of Ecuador, heir to the problems and disputes of the Province of Quito.

The boundary in dispute between the two vice-royalties of Peru and New Granada was not the least of these. An attempt had been made by royal decree in 1802 to establish these limits. It is understood that Peru accepted these boundaries and claims that Bolivar did likewise. Border clashes and negotiations for settlement have continued since 1832.

Efforts for settlement, with intermittent clashes, have, naturally, been more in evidence in the present century. An award was made in 1904 by the King of Spain, but not recognized under threat of war.

Under these conditions the future of Ecuador is not promising. No nation of its size and social-economic conditions, with a boundary dispute of this character eating at its very vitals, can be prosperous. The peaceful solution of this dispute is, therefore, imperative. Indemnity-purchase, as suggested above, with subsequent friendly disposal of the disputed area, is a practical realizable proposal. And under it both countries may continue to cherish pride of possession, cultural especially, and high sense of honor, of which each country may justly be proud.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Mr. Ickes And Lindbergh

IT IS NEVER too late to rough up the frugal Mr. Ickes, so I would like to inquire whether anyone has any old butchers-paper magazines, old newspapers, letters or phonograph records lying around in which the prince of privilege ever attacked as such any Communist or fellow traveler, or even attacked Josef Stalin, himself, as heartily as he has damned Charles Lindbergh for his association with those who think a factory for Adolf Hitler would rub no fuzz off our peach. Not to be arch or coy about this, I am driving at the fact that Mr. Ickes for years has been at least as chummy with the Muscovites in the United States as he says Lindbergh has been with the Nazis among us and, to my brilliant mind, considerably more so.

PEGLER

In this connection you have to remember that by Mr. Ickes' own formula it isn't enough merely to dislike Nazis. To suit him, you have to hate them out loud, for he said, very accusingly, of Lindbergh, in his latest denunciation last week, "No one has ever heard Lindbergh utter a word of horror at, or even aversion to, the bloody career that the Nazis are following."

AS FAR AS my recollection goes you may place a check there. I have never heard or read any such word from Lindbergh and it seems to me that any man with so much to say on the sort of world that he would like to bequeath his children would at least have tweaked the subject of Hitler's atrocities or given it the back of his hand if he really felt any aversion or horror. So I share with Ickes a feeling, based more on things that Lindbergh so conspicuously hasn't said rather than on the things he has said, that he doesn't take this butchery and satanism very much to heart.

Mr. Ickes is very good at peeling Hitler and everything he has said about him goes for me, but I have followed his associations and utterances rather attentively for a long time and I am positive that he has never viewed with equal loathing the bloody career of the Communist regime in Russia and other countries. In this respect he, himself, has never met the test which he has prescribed for Lindbergh as to the Nazis. Moreover, he has associated openly with Communists and fellow travelers and justified such association on the ground that he couldn't tell by the cut of their jibs or their smell that they were Communists or fellow travelers. Mr. Ickes can spot a Nazi sympathizer miles away and around the corner with the naked eye and a nose which knows, but a Communist is no Communist to him unless he wears his membership card in his hat band like an old-time fire engine chaser and he recognizes no such animal as a fellow traveler at all.

IT IS TRUE that Mr. Ickes has formally repudiated communism. But it is also true that, exercising the same right that Lindbergh stands on, to choose his own poison, he believes that Hitlerism is the greatest threat whereas Lindbergh thinks communism is a little the worse. As one who regards these vices as six of one and half-a-dozen of the other, I may say, not that it matters, that I think Hitlerism is the more immediate menace just now, but that there is no choice because they are alike.

But if Lindbergh, as a private citizen, goes to a meeting which he has reason to know will be packed with Nazis and their lower-case Quislings he is no more guilty, and I should say a little less guilty, of the very thing that Ickes complains of, than Ickes is when he lends his official presence to a meeting of the newspaper guild whose communistic policy has been recognized and fought over a long time by the American political minority in the guild. For Ickes to say that he was unaware of any issue of communism in the newspaper guild and the lawyers' guild, two organizations which are notoriously infested with Communists and fellow travelers is to low-rate his own intelligence, which is not as low as that, and the intelligence of those who are asked to believe him, which is not that feeble, either.

ICKES KNEW the company he was keeping just as Lindbergh knows the company he keeps today, but it will be useless to seek evidence that he ever exerted himself to drive out of the Government bureaus in Washington the Muscovites and travelers who infest the place. He has never made that his business, a rare and significant oversight on the part of a man who has taken in vastly more territory than his job requires him to.

I am confident that if Mr. Ickes were to discover a Nazi or a Quisling anywhere in the Federal Government he would drive the fiend out by hand, but observe that of Communists and fellow-travelers he demands the most elaborate proof of anti-American political principles. He even thought it would be nice to dump in the Virgin Islands, the outermost defense of the Nation in that region, a whole mass of Spanish revolutionary refugees, including, inevitably, many who would be unable to pass the political Wasserman that he applies to Lindbergh's Nazi friends.

Text of President's Message on Extension of Military Service

Text of the President's message to Congress yesterday urging the extension of service of Guardsmen, Selectees and Reserve officers.

To the Congress of the United States:

Last year the Congress of the United States recognizing the gravity of the world situation held that common prudence required that American defense, at that time relatively very weak, be strengthened in its two aspects. The first called for the production of munitions of all kinds. The second called for the training and service of personnel. The Selective Training and Service Act authorized the annual induction into military service of a maximum of 900,000 men for this training and service, of whom 600,000 are now in the Army. The Congress also authorized the induction into service of the National Guard, the Reserve officers, and other reserve components of the Army of the United States.

In the absence of further action by the Congress, all of those involved must be released from active service on the expiration of 12 months. This means that beginning this autumn about two-thirds of the Army of the United States will begin a demobolization.

The action taken last year was appropriate to the international situation at that time. It took into consideration the small size and the undeveloped state of our armed forces. The National Guard, which then formed the bulk of these forces, had to be seasoned; its technical training and general efficiency greatly improved. The ranks of the National Guard and the Regular Army had to be brought to full strength; and, in addition, the Army required for its tremendous expansion the services of approximately 50,000 Reserve officers.

Two Steps for Security

In effect, two steps were taken for the security of the Nation. First, the Selective Service Act initiated annual military training as a prime duty of citizenship. Second, the organization and training of field armies was begun—training in teamwork—company by company, battalion by battalion, regiment by regiment, and division by division. The objective was to have ready at short notice an organized and integrated personnel of over 1,000,000 men.

I need scarcely emphasize the fact that if and when an organized and integrated company, battalion, regiment or division is compelled to send two-thirds of its members home, those who return to civil life, if called to the colors later on, would have to go through a new period of organization and integration before the new unit to which they were assigned could be depended on for service. The risks and the weaknesses caused by dissolving a trained Army in times of national peril were pointed out by George Washington over and over again in his messages to the Continental Congress.

It is, therefore, obvious that if two-thirds of our present Army return to civilian life, it will be almost a year before the effective Army strength again reaches 1,000,000 men.

Must Keep Army Intact

Today it is imperative that I should officially report to the Congress what the Congress undoubtedly knows: that the international situation is not less grave but is far more grave than it was a year ago. It is so grave, in my opinion, and in the opinion of all who are conversant with the facts, that the Army should be maintained in effective numbers in a complete state of readiness. Small as it is in comparison with other armies, it should not suffer any form of disorganization or disintegration.

Therefore, we would be taking a grave national risk unless the Congress were to make it possible for us to maintain our present full effective strength and during the coming year give training to as many additional Americans as we can, when immediate readiness for service becomes more and more a vital precautionary measure, the elimination of approximately two-thirds of our trained soldiers, and about three-fourths of the total officer personnel, would be a tragic error.

Occasional individuals, basing their opinions on unsupported evidence or on no evidence at all, may with honest intent assert that the United States need fear no attack on its own territory or on the other nations of this hemisphere by aggressors from without.

Schemes Are Obvious

Nevertheless, it is the well-nigh unanimous opinion of those who are daily cognizant, as military and naval officers and as Government servants in the field of international relations, that schemes and plans of aggressor nations against American security are so evident that the United States and the rest of the Americas are definitely imperiled in their national interests. That is why reluctantly, and only after a careful weighing of all facts and all events, I recently proclaimed that an unlimited national emergency exists.

It is not surprising that millions of patriotic Americans find it difficult in the pursuit of their daily occupations and in the normal lives of their families to give constant thought to the implications of happenings many thousands of miles away. It is hard for most of us to bring such events into focus with our own readily accepted and normal democratic ways of living.

That is why I must refer again to the sequence of conquests—German conquests or attacks—which have continued uninterruptedly throughout several years—all the way from the coup against Austria to the present campaign against Russia.

Aggression Cited

Every move up and down and across Europe, and into Asia, and into Africa has been conducted according to a time schedule utilizing in every case an overwhelming superiority not only in materiel but in trained men as well. Each campaign has been based on a preliminary assurance of safety or nonaggression to the intended victim. Each campaign has been based on disarming fear and gaining time until the German government was fully ready to throw treaties and pacts to the winds and simultaneously to launch an attack in overwhelming force.

Each elimination of a victim has brought the issue of Nazi domination closer to this hemisphere, while month by month their intrigues of propaganda and conspiracy have sought to weaken every link in the community of interests that should bind the Americas into a great western family.

I do not think that any branch of the Government of the United States will be willing to let America risk the fate which has destroyed the independence of other nations.

We Americans cannot afford to speculate with the security of America.

Must Protect Neighbors

Furthermore, we have a definite responsibility to every country in the Western Hemisphere—to aid each and every one of them against attack from without the hemisphere. I do not believe that any branch of the American Government would desire today to abrogate our Pan-American pact or to discard a policy which we have maintained for nearly a century and a quarter.

If we do not reverse this historic policy, then it is our duty to maintain it. To weaken our Army at this particular time would be, in my judgment, an act of bad faith toward our neighbors.

I realize that personal sacrifices are involved in extending the period of service for selectees, the National Guard and other reserve components of our Army. I believe that provision now can and will be made in such an extension to relieve individual cases of undue hardship, and also to relieve older men who should, in justice, be allowed to resume their civilian occupations as quickly as their services can be spared.

6-Month Setback Seen

Nevertheless, I am confident that the men now in the ranks of the Army realize far better than does the general public, the disastrous effect which would result from permitting the present Army, only now approaching an acceptable state of efficiency, to melt away and set us back at least six months while new units are being reconstituted from the bottom up and from the top down with new drafts of officers and men.

The legislation of last year provided definitely that if national danger later existed, the one year period of training could be extended by action of the Congress.

I do not believe that the danger to American safety is less than it was one year ago when, so far as the Army was concerned, the United States was in a woefully weak position. I do not believe that the danger to our national safety is only about the same as it was a year ago.

Danger Is Greater

I do believe—I know—that the danger today is infinitely greater. I do believe—I know—that in all truth we are in the midst of a national emergency.

I am not asking the Congress for specific language in a specific bill. But I can say frankly that I hope the Congress will acknowledge this national emergency either for a specific period or until revocation by the Congress or the President.

The objective is, of course, the all important issue. It is to authorize continuance in service of selectees, National Guard and Reserve components of the Army and the retired personnel of the Regular Army, with the understanding that, should the exigencies or the situation permit, early return to civil pursuits will follow in due course.

Because of the swiftness of modern events, I think the Congress should also remove the restrictions in regard to the number of selectees inducted each year for training and service.

Would Return Older Men

And, in order to reduce individual hardships to a minimum, I urge that the Congress provide that employers be asked to continue to keep jobs open for their employes who have been held in the Army. For my part I will direct the return to civilian life of officers and men whose retention on active duty would impose undue hardship and that selectees and enlisted men of the National Guard, who have reached the age of 28, be transferred from active service to a reserve component as rapidly as possible.

At great cost to the Nation, and at increasing dislocation of private buying, we are accepting the material burdens necessary for our security. In such matters we accept the fact of a crisis in our history.

It is true that in modern war men without machines are of little value. It is equally true that machines without men are of no value at all. Let us consolidate the whole of our defense—the whole of our preparation against attack by those enemies of democracy who are the enemies of all that we hold dear.

One final word: time counts. Within two months disintegration, which would follow failure to take congressional action, will commence in the Armies of the United States. Time counts. The responsibility rests solely with the Congress.

Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles will deliver the principal address and the program will be carried on a Nation-wide network by the National Broadcasting Company.

Sir Arthur Salter, head of the British shipping mission, will speak on behalf of Lord Halifax who at present is on the West Coast. The guests, including many Government officials, will be welcomed by the Norwegian Minister, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne at a reception which begins at 5:30 p. m.

The new addition answers practical needs of the Norwegian Legation whose staff has been increased from 9 to 40 members, officials said. The new building will house 12 offices. Its corridors are decorated with plaques symbolic of Norway's industry, agriculture, shipping and fisheries.

House Passes Bill To Ease Quota Curbs on Wheat

The House yesterday passed legislation to amend the wheat marketing quota act to permit farmers to sell their normal production of wheat, even if harvested from excess acreage, without paying penalties.

Representative Rizley (Republican), of Oklahoma, told the House the bill "takes care of the farmer with excess acreage and a crop failure."

It was explained that the measure, which now goes to the Senate, would allow a farmer who had a 100-acre allotment and a normal production of ten bushels an acre, to sell penalty-free 1,000 bushels, even though the production actually came five bushels an acre from 200 acres. Under the present law the penalty would have to be levied on all produced on acreage in excess of the 100-acre allotment.

Chernigov, in Nazis' Path, Once Was Rival of Kiev

With Nazi troops approaching Kiev, Chernigov, one of Russia's earliest cities about 80 miles to the north, falls into the path of German operations.

"Situated on the banks of the Desna River, tributary of the mighty Dnieper the historic Russian town of Chernigov lies in the Western Ukraine just behind the Stalin Line," says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"Strategically, the city is well located," continues the bulletin. "Marshes to the north and west make the going difficult for mechanized armies.

"Chernigov is about the size of Topeka, Kan., or Roanoke, Va., and is the center of a rich Ukrainian agricultural region. Besides serving as a junction for two railroads, one of which runs to the Stalin Line, it is an important river port and trade center. The Desna affords facilities for floating logs and water power, and thus contributes greatly to the city's chief industries, timber and flour mills. An abundance of rich red clay near the city affords excellent material for a thriving pottery and brick industry.

"The surrounding region is typical of the Ukrainian agricultural country. Its chief products are sugar beets, potatoes, flax, hemp, and tobacco. Cattle-raising is simplified by a plentiful supply of fodder grains such as rye and buckwheat.

"Chernigov has enjoyed a prosperous past. In the tenth and eleventh centuries it occupied an important position politically and commercially as the capital of the principality of Seyervik. Its prosperity ranked it next to Kiev, then capital of all Russia. The invading Mongols under Batu, successor to Genghis Khan, ended Chernigov's position as an important city when they sacked and burned it. 'During the Russian Revolution, the city was occupied by Denekin and his volunteer troops, who, with the leaders of the White Russian Armies was striving to overthrow the Bolsheviks.'

Dies to Seek Probe of Union, U. S. Officials

By the Associated Press

Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, asserting that the United States was threatened with a "Popular Front," similar to what he said caused the downfall of France, declared yesterday he would ask the special committee investigating un-Americanism to subpena hundreds of C. I. O., A. F. L. and Government officials for questioning.

At a press conference he said if he had his way the committee would subpena 600 or 700 C. I. O. leaders and possibly 2,000 Government officials.

"Some of the A. F. L. leaders need a little airing, too," Dies said.

He added that he wanted to question C. I. O. leaders, particularly about "their shift in policy" following the start of the Russo-German War.

President Chooses Guy Mason To Pitch for District Team

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt's new appointee as District Commissioner was attracted to Washington in the first place because he wanted to play on its big league baseball team.

"That was in 1904," Guy Mason grinningly explained yesterday, "and I was pretty bad. A one-day tryout proved to me that playing in the big time wasn't like playing ball in the Army, where I'd had my experience."

Shortstop and second base were the favorite positions of the Hoosier—via New Jersey—athlete. But he'll be pitching soon, provided the Senate confirms the appointment; pitching for the District Building team.

Your new Commissioner-designate is 61 but would look 15 years less if his hair weren't pure white. Nearly 6 feet tall, his 170 pounds are mostly brawn and muscle nurtured by three rounds of golf per week. He shot an 84 Saturday, slipped to 88 on Sunday. (This writer should slip so!)

An interview with Mason yesterday in his Tower Building law office was interrupted time after time by telephoned congratulations. One of the first was from Commissioner J. Russell Young who, like Mason, "used to be a newspaperman myself." Then Leslie L. Biffle, majority secretary of the Senate; Chesley Jurney, Senate sergeant at arms; Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech (who was mentioned for the Commissionership); and newspaper correspondents, legal brethren and others almost without end.

"They wish me luck," said Mason, inserting a cigarette into a long holder, "and I tell them I'll need it. And their support, too. If and when I become Commissioner, I'll start the job without any preconceived notions of any kind, without any experience in running a city."

Lack of such experience should be no handicap, his friends feel, to a man who knows the city from a quarter century's residence, who has the advantage of being obligated or indebted to no one, who has made himself an enviable reputation as an able, conscientious lawyer and, before that, as an alert newsman.

Guy Mason was born in Pierston, Ind., on September 10, 1880. He obtained his public schooling in New Jersey, his father's original home. When this country declared war on Spain, young Mason obtained parental consent to enlist but, to his regret, he got no farther south than Tampa, Fla.

A little later, however, he happily found himself being shipped to the Philippines for anti-insurrection duty as a cavalryman. He stayed there two and a half years. Mustered out of the Army in 1904, Mason tried to get back in when the United States entered the World War. They turned him down because of a slight flaw in one hand, a souvenir of his earlier military service.

In the Army he was no mean shakes as a boxer—145 pounds was his best fighting weight—and as a baseball infielder. Fact is, he thought he would make a career of baseball.

"But that one-day tryout showed me—not to mention the manager—I was hardly ripe even for Class D," says Mason.

So he got a job with the telephone company and held it—until the news bug infected him. One day, green as a cucumber—and just as cool—he walked into The Post city room and announced he wished to be a reporter. Mason had picked a perfect spot—a story had to be covered right away and no one was available for assignment.

"Go out to Riggs Farm," the boss said, gruffly, "and handle the distinterment of Maj. L'Enfant."

Mason had never heard of L'Enfant, much less did he know that here was the man who designed the Nation's Capital, but he asked no questions. When The Post went to press, nevertheless, it was with a L'Enfant story that pleased the boss very much indeed.

A few months late Mason quit The Post to work for the Jamestown Exposition press division under Stephen Bolles, who later became a Representative from Wisconsin. In Virginia he met a school teacher, who became his wife before he returned to Washington late in 1907.

During the next decade he reached the first flight in newspapering as correspondent for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, the old New York World, London Daily Telegraph and International News Service. First, however, he prepped himself for national news writing by putting in a second hitch with The Post and a short stay on the old Washington Herald, covering police court, the District Building and other local assignments.

He began studying law in 1914 and received his degree from National University two years later. In the former year he accepted appointment to the Plaza Commission by President Wilson, the three-man group being named to acquire land for development of the Capitol plaza.

In 1916 he became secretary of the Woodrow Wilson Independent League and Washington representative of the League to Enforce Peace. Resolved to switch from newspapering to law, he dropped all journalistic connections in that year, except his London Telegraph folio. Later that went, too.

When he couldn't get back into the Army in 1917, he opened up a law office with W. W. Spalding, whom he had met as a fellow member on the Plaza Commission. They are still partners, in the firm of Mason, Spalding & McAtee.

In 1920 President Wilson named Mason to membership on the District Rent Commission. It was due to his admiration for the World War President that he became a Democrat. His first votes were cast as a Republican, the party of his father, in New Jersey.

Too, he started out as a Methodist and is now an Episcopalian.

He belongs to the Cathedral Lodge of Masons, Almas Shrine Temple and the National Press Club. His thrice-weekly golf is played at Burning Tree Friday night is reserved for a sociable game of poker. He takes an occasional highball.

Chief hobby, even above golf, is chin-chucking a brand-new grandchild, the first. Her mother is Mrs. Humphrey Peake Harnsberger, the Masons' only child.

Mason's appointment as Commissioner has its origin in his journalistic days a generation ago at the White House and the State, War and Navy Building. It was there and then that he met Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as well as Stephen T. Early and Marvin H. McIntyre, of the White House secretariat and who were fellow writers in the Wilson Administration.

Strictly a "dark horse," wholly unmentioned in speculations as to the successor to the late Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Mason received a call from the White House one day last week. When the post was offered to him, he said he wanted "two or three days" to think it over.

On Saturday he was received by the President. The upshot was that Mason accepted.

"It's a tough job, and one that I know nothing about, but I'm willing—and I still have a lot of vigor left," says the friendly, blue-eyed Hoosier who couldn't make the Washington ball team. No, not even in a year when its record—113 games lost—was the worst ever, before or since.

Clark Griffith may sign him up yet, for Sunday games, anyway.

CECIL LINDENBERGER

PRIVATE R. C. (TEX) WHIDDON

By Charles Mercer
Post Staff Writer

The people, or at any rate a good proportion of them, said "Yes!" yesterday to President Roosevelt's request of Congress that selectees remain in the Army for more than one year.

They were young people with much to lose in long periods of military service. But the majority felt they had more to lose if the Nation were insufficiently prepared to defend their way of life.

They heard the voice of the President from radios in autos and corner drugstores or the statements of commentators on his warning that "Within two months disintegration, which would follow failure to take Congressional action, will commence in the armies of the United States."

It was the subject over many a mid-afternoon coke or cigarette.

ATHLENE BAKER

BERNICE FRANKLIN

"It would be a right good thing if they stayed in because of this emergency," he said. "I should think it would take more than one year to make a good soldier. I'm in class 3A myself because I'm married, but I think I'd be willing to stay in if I was already in."

Strolling through Franklin Park was Private R. C. (Tex) Whiddon, 28, who 11 months ago got tired of farming near Gainesville, Tex., and decided to get his wings with the Army Air Corps. Now he's assigned to the Thirty-third Pursuit Squadron at Mitchel Field, N. Y., and came down to Washington on leave for "a little fidoozlin' around."

Tex said, "I don't see how a man can get all the training necessary in one year. I've been in 11 months and I sure got a lot to learn yet. Maybe if I was drafted I'd feel different. Maybe I'd be sweatin' to get out. But the truth is that these guys have got to give more of their time."

Pretty Miss Athelene Baker, 19, of 408 Tenth Street Southeast, a stenographer at the Federal Housing Administration, cast the one dissenting vote among those who were questioned at random.

"I don't think those fellows should be kept in the Army for more than one year," she said. "They've given up a lot already."

She said she did not feel competent to judge the national emergency, adding that she had no selfish motive in her view since the one she is interested in is in medical school and exempt.

A waitress in the 900 block of Fourteenth Street Northwest, Miss Bernice Franklin, 22, of 5033 Seventh Street Northwest, spoke in counterpoint to Miss Baker.

"They ought to stay in that Army," she said. "They're needed and they ought to stay no matter how they feel about it."

It will be another year before the number of William Finley, 20, of 119 Second Street Northeast, is pulled out of the big glass bowl. But——

"Probably it's not fair for those already in to stay more than one year. But the new men coming up should have an understanding that they won't be out in a hurry."

Carlos Palmer, of 2526 Seventeenth Street Northwest, a Federal Housing Administration employe, pointed out that "In Germany they get the kids when they're 12 years old and they never let 'em go."

Palmer's number won't be up for a long time yet, he said. Nevertheless he would be willing to stay in the service for more than one year. He can't understand why others don't feel the same way.

"The world's in such a bad state, you see."

Defense and Tourist Industries Compete

By Bill Cunningham

Laconia, N. H.—One of New England's mightiest industries in these times is the resort business. It's watched closely by many outside checkers because, "summer business," as it is called in this region, is considered a sure barometer reading upon general conditions. Florida winter hotel men watch New England's summer business closely, to mention but one group. There's supposed to be a definite tie between the two. As one goes the other goes. The only trouble there is that noboby exactly knows which goes first. It's like the classic puzzle as to whether the hen antedated the egg.

But however it is, and for all the world to know, summer business in Laconia thus far this season is breaking all records for so many years that you might as well say it's breaking all records' period. Starting with the Memorial Day weekend, the entire region was jammed, and the long Fourth of July weekend presented an unprecedented picture of great numbers of visitors sleeping all night in their parked cars on city streets and in parking lots because there wasn't a bed to be rented anywhere in the county.

That's the way it's going. In accordance with custom the weekends are big with "trippers"—only, this year they're not big but terrific. During the week, the trade steadies to regular vacationers, but that's likewise far above normal. Laconia, of course, is "the city" for a sizable summer camp, and even summer estate business. The normal population of the thereabouts is 14,000. The summer jumps it to 35,000.

Business is good. People are spending. You city and Southern and Western merchants get ready.

But the strange part of it is that that's not all there is to business in Laconia these days. Here's one of the last places on earth a casual would expect to stumble across defense industries, away up here in the middle of the inlands, where the principal industry has been summer swimming, boating and loafing, and the winters, of late years, upped a little by the skiers, but Uncle Sam's preparation is matching the summer business this year. The resident population is engrossed mostly in that.

It may amaze you to learn that Laconia was, years ago, considered the hosiery manufacturing center of the world. Why Laconia? Because the dampness of the air, probably due to so much water in the region, provided just the proper temperature and all, for that sort of specialized business. All but 4 of 19 big hosiery mills eventually went elsewhere. But even these departures left buildings and in some cases machinery that have been turned to other uses, and now they're defense uses.

Specifically, a local ski factory is turning out skiis and snowshoes for the United States Army, the four hosiery mills are making hundreds of thousands of sox for the Army, a wood processing factory is working full time making material for pontoon bridges used by Army engineers, a brush handle factory has left the brush-making business flat and is turning out gadgets that go on the fusillages of airplanes, local lumber concerns are making boxes and crates for the Army, another factory is making tape to go in Army shoes.

But the biggest of all is the town's principal industrial plant, Scott & Williams, normally a plant for the manufacture of knitting machines employing 700. This has been converted completely into a subsidiary of one of the largest companies making airplane material and 1,200 employes have it going full blast making a product that is part of Uncle Sam's aerial fighters.

So the picture of this town is probably the picture of America. For those who can afford it, the normal joys and relaxations of the summer vacation period are being enjoyed in standard fashion—the principal difference being that more people than usual seem able to afford it.

Here's one New England community successfully performing the skillful feat of riding two contrasted industries Roman style at full speed. The summer vacationers were never having better weather nor enjoying themselves in such numbers. Parts for guns, planes and the trappings for soldiers roll out apace in the same general neighborhood. Here's alertness, initiative, decision and production. Here's the real Yankee. There's nobody like him.

Fall Hat Previews Show Trend to Styles of the Past

Hats are the first harbingers of fall clothes. And the latest news from the hat fashion front—the New York showings—is that chapeaux will either go higher and higher on the head—or lower and lower. Designers toy with the idea of giving revealing hats that require sleekly groomed hair, or concealing ones that are a cover-up for defects in hair styling. There are berets and turbans swirling the nape of the neck; sweeping low-crowned brims anchored with chignons; high-topped cloches of the 20's with a backward tilt; and medieval wimples swathing the chin

Reminiscent of the 20's this coiffure-subordinating style reaches its height in a towering cloche by John-Fredrics. Belting of "golden sherry" collaborates with mink to form a turban that builds up and leans back like the tower of Pisa

The streamlined medieval wimple, like the one designed by Florence Reichman (above) is one way of covering the hat while framing the face. It is an example of the trend toward the cover-up effect about the neck or "back coverage"

The swishing rolled brim hat above features a brown cord gathering a crushed crown. Its brown felt finds contrast in the "corset pink" of a panne velvet chignon. The chignon shows the trend toward firm anchorage of brimmed hats

Learn New Dance Steps

YES, men do tell—about your dancing! If you go on vacation dates without knowing smart steps like the tango, if you're hard to lead, word gets out and you're a "branded woman."

But study up on your steps at home with footprint diagrams and you'll burst on the vacation crowd with a bang.

The special trick of the tango is simple. Step with a firm cat-like tread, bending your knees and lifting your feet slightly from the floor. Now see how smoothly you can do it.

For the girl—whose role in dancing is mostly backward steps—the test of lightness is her ability to lift the heel of her supporting foot at any time. So, before beginning a backward step, sway slightly forward.

And don't be the kind who can only dance the same old step to a waltz or fox trot. Give the boys a thrill by knowing clever variations!

Our 40-page booklet, SOCIAL DANCING SELF-TANGHT, has diagrams and directions for basic steps and variations of the fox trot, Westchester, waltz, shag and Lindy Hop—also the smart rumba, tango and Conga. Has tips on leading, following.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, Social Dancing Self Taught, to the NEW YORK OFFICE of The Washington Post, Home Institute, 100 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Cranberries Are Healthful!

Do you know that cranberries contain iron, calcium, phosphorous, copper, manganese, vitamin A and vitamin C? Those cranberries which grow in the salt-drenched atmosphere of Cape Cod and along the coast of New Jersey are also a good source of iodine.

Time to Lengthen Skirts, Says Marlene Dietrich

Hollywood, Calif.—Because women are extremists and never relinquish a fashion until it has been played to the hilt, Marlene Dietrich is of the opinion that the psychological time has arrived to lengthen skirts. Hers for daytime will be at a new calf length which she believes will be the accepted one for fall. Women are getting tired of short skirts, according to the star.

The new, longer bodice lines make the adding of a few flattering inches to hems almost a necessity if one wants to have a balanced silhouette, she adds. Then, if a girl actually dislikes hiding a pretty knee, she may slash her skirt up one side and still be right with the mode. That was the theme of many of Miss Dietrich's clothes for "Manpower," her new picture for Warner Bros. For formal wear, the slit, which is often placed side-back, may be accentuated with beaded embroidery and braid scrolling.

Among Marlene's clothes with the longer skirt is an afternoon suit for the cocktail hours. It's in a navy angora wool with elongated jacket flared slightly toward the back. The sleeves are bracelet length and shirred softly at the elbows. A high, winged collar falls away from a low, V-shaped neckline. The actress accents its smart soberness with three Chinese heads of pink quartz matched in a bracelet and the rim on her navy woolen bag. Other navy accessories are a large cartwheel hat of silk net, sheer net gloves that emphasize her bracelet and deep pink nail polish, and sandals with broad ankle straps.

Pink and White For Make-up Goal

Hollywood, Calif.—A pink and white effect should be the make-up goal of any girl who features bright blues in her summer wardrobe, maintains Gladys George, who likes this cool cosmetic effect during hot weather.

Gladys uses an ivory-toned powder, rouge with a light bluish cast, a clear red lip rouge without blue or orange tones in it, and for evenings the merest touch of a greenish gray eyeshadow which she blends herself.

Deeper skin tones will, of course, require a darker shade of powder, but tests Gladys has made on other feminine members of the cast prove that the delicate apple blossom effect is good on every girl who wears blue.

Beat the Heat By Stripping To Essentials

By Ida Jean Kain

IF YOU SEEM AS fresh as a daisy when everyone else is wilting with the weather, you'll probably be a sensation. It takes some managing but you can keep up the appearance of being cool and collected.

Summer is not the time to wear heavy make-up or to doll up too much. Light make-up not only looks cooler, but is much more in keeping with the fresh, scrubbed-behind-the-ears kind of beauty that goes best with the season. Use little, if any, mascara and eye shadow and no heavy perfumes—just a whiff of light, floral scent. Do your splurging with cologne, which cools you off.

You will look more comfortable in a simple little frock of some noncrushable material than in fussy dresses. And the less jewelry the better. Doodads and bangles are heat conductors. And a furpiece cuddled around a girl's neck almost makes me run a temperature.

Carry Extra Hankie

Nothing makes you appear more completely wilted than to rummage around in your handbag and come up with a dank little ball of a handkerchief. Why not carry a spare? And always start out in the morning with a clean compact puff, perhaps an extra one, because the oil from your skin quickly soils your powder-puff. You might like to tuck into your bag one of those small packets of make-up fresheners for the hot days in town. They will save your face after you have spent a few hours trudging around in the heat.

Your accessories must be freshly laundered to give you that crisp appearance. Slightly soiled collars and gloves take all the starch out of your looks. Before you draw on your gloves, go over hands, wrists and arms with a dab of cotton saturated with cologne. That will make you feel cooler and will keep your gloves fresh longer.

Do Up Loose Ends

To feel about 10 degrees cooler than the thermometer says, brush your hair up away from your face and off your neck. If your hair needs doing more often, you might try having it set with tonic every other time.

Don't let your figure slump. Just a trio out of your daily dozen will keep your waist trim and your muscular girdle in good tone, and will also keep you feeling fit and better able to stand the heat. Take your exercise in the cool of the morning before you lose interest.

Be a smart girl and don't drink too many heating beverages on a hot evening. Fresh fruit juice is about the best thing you can order. During the day drink plenty of water and occasionally add to it a pinch of salt. That will help you to keep your salt balance when you perspire freely. And speaking of perspiration, one of the nonperspirant deodorants under the arms is a necessity in warm weather.

A light diet is a great help in beating the heat. Eat more fruits and vegetables and drink more milk and leave off the rich, high calorie foods.

Mary Haworth's Mail

During Past Five Years, Girl, Now 21, Has Changed From Sweet, Unspoiled Youngster Into Mean, Selfish Daughter; Her Mother Asks How to Deal With Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: During the last five years, my daughter (now 21) has changed from a sweet, unspoiled youngster into a mean, selfish, impudent girl. When I so describe her, you must know I do so because it is the actual fact—as it is very painful to have to speak so of one's child. I don't quite recall when or how it started. But all at once I realized she was being impudent to me. My mother would never have stood from me the kind of "back talk" I stand from my daughter. I suppose I should have used a strap in the beginning, because I have found that scolding has no effect.

As it happens, I am a working mother. It has been necessary for me to work in order to supplement the family income and give this daughter everything she needed and many extras she wanted. She was sent away to college, and in childhood she went to summer camps. We have given her lovely clothes and many other advantages that I, as a child and growing girl, never had. But I have yet to speak to my mother as rudely as my daughter now habitually speaks to me. There is lacking, in her speech and behavior toward me, the common courtesy which any person should show another. And yet, just because she is my daughter, I work so that she may have what she wants.

Our apartment is far more expensive than we need so that she may have the "good address" that means so much to her. My husband and I would be blissfully happy, would consider it a privilege to work our fingers to the bone for her, if only she gave us some love and tenderness and devotion in return, instead of the impudence, abuse and hatred revealed by her attitude.

Recently she found a position paying a fairly good salary, yet I have no idea of asking her to contribute to the upkeep of the home. Perhaps I am wrong in this. Should I ask her to pay her share? If she refuses, then what? How can I get her to treat her parents as courteously and as respectfully as she would treat a stranger? When she is impudent to me before others should I overlook the matter? Or should I act, then and there, to put a stop to her rudeness? If so, what method would you suggest?

You may think I am a nagging mother; that I provoke her into saying and doing the things she does. But this is not true. I treat her as any mother would treat her daughter—with love and kindness and generosity. But something is wrong somewhere, and I can't find the cause. Our child has grown to hate us and I don't know why. She is a very pretty girl, and popular with both boys and girls. But our servant dislikes her because she is so mean. And I am beyond feeling, because she is just plain ugly in her actions toward me. Can you tell us how to correct the situation? My husband has suggested that we get your advice. Sincerely, V. M. K.

Free Her From Strain Of Coercive Coddling

DEAR V. M. K.: It is obvious, from all you say, that you and your husband have virtually made slaves of yourselves in your daughter's service from the time she was born until today, when she is 21. Why have you done this? Why have you consistently lived beyond your means, striven beyond your strength, in order to give her "advantages" you could not actually afford? Because (I suppose you would say) you have cared only for her happiness, asking nothing in return for your labor and sacrifice except only that she remain lovingly and gratefully on the receiving end.

But you have failed to understand through the years that, in a sense, you have been trying to pile up mortgages on your daughter's future, trying to indebt her helplessly and hopelessly to you, by the very sacrificial slavishness of your devotion to her. Up to a point (up to her sixteenth year) she was docile in her subconsciously dismayed acceptance of your overweening bounty—bounty which she instinctively realized had its price: the price of loving, unquestioning obedience; of being "mother's good girl;" of doing what mother says, because mother asks it, because mother loves her, and because mother makes all things possible for her.

Since, however, bright children from the cradle upward are uncannily wise to what is going on in their lives (even though not always able to articulate or to act upon this knowledge), it is likely your daughter has fretted since childhood under a burden of resentment of what she felt was being done to her (rather than for her), in the name of love. One can imagine that she felt herself being smothered by an insistent, extravagant, coercive devotion, when what she really wanted was to be allowed to grow freely, with some privacy and independence of thought and feeling and action, in a domestic atmosphere of casual (though steadfast) affection.

One can imagine that, during the years from 16 to 21—those crucial years in which the fledgling personality seeks to define and to assert its intrinsic power and pattern—your daughter has been engaged in a desperate struggle to cut clear of her parents' inordinate emotional attentiveness. It seems that, in both thought and behavior, she has been threshing around wildly, in the manner of a trapped creature, battling frantically for that measure of psychic independence of her parents which instinct tells her is proper and healthy.

During these years, you say, she has changed from "a sweet, unspoiled youngster into a mean, selfish, impudent girl." Nowadays, she "talks back" to you,—in a manner indescribably rude and insolent, totally lacking in "the common courtesy which any person should show another." Yet, at the same time, she is popular with boys and girls; apparently never has been in difficulties at school, and is not guilty of wilful, wild or worrisome social behavior outside the home. She has been able to find and hold a "fairly good job." In brief, she is not a vicious person, and has demonstrated both ability and willingness to make a "good social adjustment" to all who treat her as a person, rather than a puppet.

All this would indicate that her "bad daughter" conduct toward you is a violent rejection of your smothering love; an angry, bewildered shaking off of a bond which instinct tells her would keep her forever "mother's little girl" if she surrendered to it. So my advice to you is to "let go" of her emotionally. How do this? By ceasing to look to her for a continuous demonstration of tender devotion. By giving her an absent-minded sort of affectionate treatment. By letting her come to you for advice, if and when she wants it, instead of constantly bombarding her with solicitous suggestions, as you probably do.

For your sake and your daughter's sake, you must develop interests in life that have no direct relation to her. Instead of investing most of your time, thought, effort and money in her affairs, you must meet the necessity—too long evaded—of finding emotional satisfaction in larger, less personalized pursuits. Such as, for instance, church work, war relief and home defense activities, support of civic projects, good citizen programs and so on.

When your outlook and activities take in more of the world than the family circle, you will be at once more appreciated by your daughter and less morbidly preoccupied with her emotions and reactions. And this precise revision of attitude, on the part of both, is the thing needed to ease the present unhappy conflict, and put your daughter in a frame of mind where she will want to be courteous and financially cooperative.

Window Shades Help Increase Home Comfort

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

The window shade has been in the shade these past few years. Its more glamorous relation, the Venetian blind, has had all the attention, but don't think that the window shade has retired defeated from the field. Oh, no—as a matter of fact, they're still the backlog of window treatments, if we may mix a homely metaphor.

What's more they promise to grab off some glory again now that an important research organization has released the results of a temperature test conducted with window shades. It seems that shades help a lot in keeping the house cooler in summer and warmer in winter. But here are the specific figures: A single cloth shade kept pulled down at each window through the hours when the sun is direct on the room will cut down the heat coming into the room about 45 per cent, while two shades at each window will reduce the heat about 65 per cent. In winter a single cloth shade kept drawn will reduce heat loss by about 40 per cent while two shades will reduce heat loss about 54 per cent. In other words two cloth shades at each window, kept drawn during hours of darkness in winter, will reduce the fuel bill about 10 per cent.

The color of the cloth makes a difference in keeping the room cooler in summer, light colors and white being the best. The color matters little in winter, the heat loss being dependent more on the thermal resistance of the fabric itself. A proper fit of shade to window matters a lot too in keeping the heat in—that's on account of the air space between shade and window frame.

More summer comfort is also promised in a new type of bronze wire screen that is constructed to resist sun heat. This is said to reduce heat in the room about 30 per cent and to keep out insects and dust into the bargain.

June Is Over but Interest In Brides Lingers On

How Some of Them Are Handling Problems Of Settling Down in Capital Homes

By Patricia Grady

June is the month of brides. It is the month when parties, conversation and social items revolve around them, when what they're going to wear, what they're going to do and where they're going on their wedding trips are subjects of the utmost social importance. But this is July. And July is the month when vacations, visitors and summer fetes make up our social pattern. Therefore in full knowledge of doing the unorthodox—a few words on what some June brides are doing in July.

Nancy Hoskinson O'Grady (Mrs. James Michael Earle O'Grady since June 11) is in the throes of housewively cares and troubles. Though much had been done on the swank apartment at Hotel 2400 before the wedding, there are still drapes that have not been finished, furniture that has not been delivered, remodeling that is still in process. No one stepping into the sleek black foyer set off with white metal furniture, or the yellow-ceilinged, gray-walled, mirror-fireplaced living room of the O'Grady menage would guess that everything was not in impeccable running condition. But a door opened from it would show painters at work in the dining room, a useless kitchen until stove and frigidaire have been installed, a pretty bride trying to get workmen out, furniture and a maid in.

However, by fall, Nancy O'Grady is sure that her household will be on an organized schedule and that she will have time to learn French and Spanish. Since Husband Jimmy is planning on taking the State Department Foreign Service examinations in the fall, she feels that her knowledge of the languages will help him in his chosen career. And then, too, in the fall she wants to be ready for the parties that there was not time for when she was a bride-to-be.

Mrs. Duncan Settles Here

Bette Hartz Duncan, whose marriage to Harry Duncan took place the same week as the O'Grady nuptials, is just settling down in an apartment at the Kennedy-Warren after a wedding trip through the Western States. She is enjoying relaxing after the mad rush of wedding plans and parties and is helping her sister, Janet Hartz, make plans for her fall wedding to Walter Gallagher.

Barbara Henning O'Connell, a bride of the same week, started her career as a housewife yesterday when she supervised furniture packing preparatory to a move to Fort Sill, Okla., the end of the week. She and her lieutenant-husband have been staying with her parents since they returned from a honeymoon in Canada. They will motor to Oklahoma by way of Alabama, where they will stop for a few days' visit with his parents, Col. and Mrs. George O'Connell. They will be in Fort Sill, where they will stay with Mrs. O'Connell's sister and brother-in-law, Capt. and Mrs. N. Landon Head, while Lieut. O'Connell takes a three-month military course. From there they will go on to Fort Bliss, El Paso, Tex., where they will be stationed more or less permanently. While staying with the Hennings, Barbara discovered that her husband was a natural-born chef—his sauted chicken is the masterpiece of his many concoctions—so her housekeeping problems have been simplified.

Rose Chatfield-Taylor MacMurray is vacationing with Junebenedict Frank Goodnow MacMurray in Norfolk, Conn. They will set up housekeeping in the fall in Brookline, Mass., when Frank goes back to finish his studies at Harvard Medical School.

Mrs. Hammonds Reads Cookbooks

Though missing out on being a June bride by about a week, Ellen Floweree Hammonds is wrestling with the same problems. Now in a furnished house in Wesley Heights with a "grand" maid, Mrs. Hammonds and her husband, who is a lawyer in the Department of Justice, are relaxing and gaining strength before the ordeal of having to find another house by the 15th of October.

Ellen Hammonds, who is regaining the weight she lost during the flurry and excitement of prenuptial arrangements, claims to be getting increasingly domestic. She reads cook books, women's magazines, does her own marketing and has decided to make a hook rug. She has also been entertaining on a small scale, trying out her menus on "Uncle Buzzy" (Clarence Hewes) before she attempts a trial on larger gatherings.

All of which goes to prove that even in July the June brides are with us still.

Clarence Hewes Off on Auto Trip To New England

Clarence Hewes left yesterday by motor for a trip through New England. His ultimate destination is Bar Harbor, where he will spend several days.

En route back to Washington Mr. Hewes will stop off at South Dartmouth, Mass., to attend the wedding of Miss Angelica Lloyd to Peter McDonald. The ceremony will take place on Saturday, August 2, and will be followed by a large reception at Potomska, summer home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Demarest Lloyd.

Mr. Hewes expects to be here on his return only a short while, then to go to Hot Springs, Va., for a stay.

Bostroms Guests Of Maj. Warner

The Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis on Long Island, were among the guests at a luncheon given on Sunday by Maj. and Mrs. John A. Warner. Honor guests were Mr. and Mrs. Duncan S. Ellsworth.

Miss Baumann Becomes Bride

The wedding of Miss Mary Frances Baumann and Dr. Uthai Vincent Wilcox 2d took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in St. Alban's Church with the Rev. Charles T. Warner officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Penick Baumann. Dr. Wilcox is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Uthai Vincent Wilcox, of Georgetown. White gladioli and palms were used to decorate the church.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white marquisette gown ending in a sweeping train. It was fashioned with full sleeves and a pleated ruffle outlined with tucked yoke and waistline. Her three-tiered veil fell from a coronet of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white bouvardia and gladioli.

Miss Sabra Baumann served as maid of honor for her sister, wearing a pink net frock made with a bouffant skirt and shirred bodice. Her halo hat was trimmed with blue forget-me-nots and she carried pink roses and blue delphinium. Capt. John Hughes Donoghue, U. S. A., served as best man and ushers were Dr. James L. Wells and Dr. John R. Grunwell.

A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents in Cleveland Park. Mrs. Baumann wore a wood violet chiffon frock with a lace jacket and her corsage was of sweetheart roses and purple asters. Mrs. Wilcox selected a gray chantilly lace frock with inserts of marquisette. She wore a corsage of sweetheart roses and forget me nots.

When the couple left for their wedding trip in the South, the bride wore a blue and white ensemble. She attended George Washington University and National School of Fine and Applied Arts. Dr. Wilcox was graduated from the medical school of Georgetown University. He is the holder of the fellowship at the Warwick Clinic, Garfield Hospital.

Mme. Lombard, sister of Lieut. Carusi, hopes to fly to the West Coast soon and join her sister-in-law on the return trip. A native Washingtonian, Mme. Lombard says she has seen more of Europe than her own country and is looking forward to viewing the West for the first time.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

RIGHT IN THE DEAD of midsummer, the Chevy Chase Club had the biggest evening crowd for dancing the other night in the summer history of that secluded sport and social sanctuary. The club, serving as a sort of barometer of how many people are in town is this season even packed on Sunday evenings, traditional night when city places are at their most deserted.

Dudley Harmon

This past Sunday finding a vacant chair on the beautiful lawn overlooking the golf course was a problem. Army and Navy and Government officials, with Britishers here on business, were present in large numbers—a sign that they lead the no-vacation contingent in the Capital.

Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles were with a party on the lawn . . . Mr. and Mrs. Stanley-Brown had with them Kenneth Bewley of the British Purchasing Commission, former financial counselor of the Embassy. He arrived from England recently via clipper and plans to be here several months at least . . . Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt were in an interesting group which included the two writers, Col. John Thomason and James Boyd, author of "Drums" and other best sellers. Mrs. Thomas and the David Karricks also sat with them.

IT DOESN'T sound like Washington, but guests who had forgotten to bring wraps actually shivered in the evening air. Mrs. Finkenstaedt wore a brilliant red jacket of wool, three-quarter length, over her summer print. Her daughter, Sita, and Elaine Darlington have arrived in Los Angeles on their motor trip West and expect to return here the end of the month. Mr. and Mrs. Finkenstaedt have lingered on in Washington the entire summer but will leave early in August to attend the famous Berkshire Music Festival in Massachusetts.

Mrs. Preston Delano donned a green velvet jacket over her dress as she enjoyed a sandwich supper on the lawn with Mr. Delano, Judd Thompson and Richard Miller . . . Walter White said that Mrs. White will come down from Nantucket tomorrow to look for a house for the winter. Their home in Georgetown has been bought by Mr. and Mrs. David Bruce . . . Mrs. Carroll Morgan looked like a school girl in a white tennis dress and blue tweed coat, with her racket under her arm. She hopes to get off tomorrow for three weeks in Canada . . . With Capt. and Mrs. Fred Richards were two British naval officers . . . Ed Foley, general counsel of the Treasury and his pretty sister were guests of a member . . . Several from the Japanese Embassy were stowing their golf clubs in a car after a round on the links.

THE CLUB is a Mecca this summer for members who must spend the entire warm season in town. Many go out early Sunday morning and remain all day, having lunch and dinner there. Everybody asks for some of the famous Chevy Chase Club soft yellow cheese, which you can't find anywhere else in Washington. The club buys the entire output of a Vermont firm. White jacketed waiters scurry about the lawn behind the clubhouse, which looks out on the rolling green links extending way over to Wisconsin Avenue.

It's the usual thing to remain on the waiting list from 5 to 7 years before getting into the club. The oldest in Washington, it was formerly a hunting preserve. In the tap room is engraved on the wall the first reference to Chevy Chase in literature, from a poem by Chaucer. He spelled it "Chevlot Chase."

"KEEP 'EM FLYING" instead of "Down the hatch" or "Skol" may be the thing at Capital cocktail parties from now on. Government workers have received a mimeographed notice requesting that they substitute this motto of the California aircraft workers for such expressions . . . One man recently drafted to work for defense is going mad because of Government red tape in getting supplies. For weeks he has been trying to get another chair to add to the one in his office. Now, if a visitor is less important than he, he remains seated, and the other stands. If the caller is more important, the host stands and lets the visitor sit. So far he has not conducted any business conversation on the same level with a person since coming to Washington.

W. Ney Evanses Give Dinner Party For Defense Group

Though much of residential and official Washington may be summering in mountains and by seashores, one group of officialdom is sticking close to their desks no matter how high the temperature mounts—the national defense leaders.

Proving that some of them manage to work a little relaxation into their vacationless summers was the dinner party given last night on the Shoreham terrace by Mr. and Mrs. Ney Evans. Mrs. Evans, who is assisting Mayor LaGuardia in the home defense effort, had among her guests the Federal Security Adminsitrator and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, who returned yesterday from a trip to Indianapolis; Miss Harriett Elliot, a member of the National Defense Advisory Board; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, a member of the Social Security Board, and Frank Bane, executive director of the Council of State Governments.

Howard Dietz, Wife Return to Sands Point

Howard Dietz, well-known Broadway librettist, and Mrs. Dietz have returned to their Sands Point, Long Island, home after a stay of several days in Washington. Mr. Dietz has been working with the committee for defense savings.

Another recent visitor to Washington was the Earl of Carrick, who is stationed at the Navy Yard in New York City. He was accompanied here by Lieut. J. Stanley Carey, U. S. N., and they stayed at the Wardman Park.

Miss Taeusch, Mr. Huddleson Are Married

White gladioli and palms decorated St. Alban's Church for the wedding of Miss Mary Calolyn Taeusch and Edwin E. Huddleson, jr., yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock, with the Rev. Charles T. Warner officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. Taeusch, of Cleveland Park. Mr. Huddleson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Huddleson, who came here from their home in Oakland, Calif., for the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white pique frock fashioned on princess lines and ending in a slight train. It had long, lace sleeves and was buttoned down the front with a series of tiny buttons. Her fingertip-length veil was held by a wreath of jasmine and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids.

Mrs. Dennis Strobe Jackson served as matron of honor. She wore a yellow pique frock made with short puffed sleeves and a full skirt. Her bouquet was of yellow water lilies and she wore a coronet of yellow roses in her hair. Miss Barbara Taeusch served as maid of honor for her sister. Her frock was of pink with short sleeves and full skirt. She carried a cluster of pink water lilies and wore pink roses in her hair.

Mr. Huddleson served as best man for his son. Ushers were Porter McKeever, Jean Chapdelaine, of the Canadian Legation; Thomas Gagan, Allison Dunham, and Nestor Foley and Edward Murphy, jr., of New York City.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was given at the home of the bride's parents on Macomb Street. Mrs. Taeusch wore a beige marquisette gown and a cluster of sweetheart roses. Mrs. Huddleson was gowned in a blue ensemble and wore a corsage of gardenias. When the couple left for their wedding trip the bride wore a green linen suit. They will make their home in Fayetteville, N. C., which is near Fort Bragg, where the bridegroom is stationed.

The bride was graduated from Vassar College in 1937 and has been attending Corcoran Art School here. She studied art for a year at the University of Paris in France. Mr. Huddleson was graduated from Stanford University in California and received his law degree from Harvard. He was law clerk for Associate Justice Frank Murphy and also served as law clerk for Judge Augustus Hand in New York City.

Deputy Civilian Defense Director Walmsley Brings One Made in Germany

By Lucia Giddens

T. Semmes Walmsley, acting deputy director of the Office of Civilian Defense, brought a frying pan made in Germany to the Newspaper Women's Club aluminum shower yesterday afternoon, thus inspiring another visitor to make a pun about "panning Hitler."

Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, smartly attired in a black and white print dress, brandished an old aluminum vessel as she entered the club. The wife of the Vice President, like all others attending the club's "open house," brought a donation for the shower—collected for the defense program.

Mrs. Charles W. Kutz, wife of the District Commissioner, brought his cocktail shaker, tied with red, white and blue ribbon, and added it to the bin in the garden of the club.

To questioners, Mr. Walmsley explained that he acquired his symbolic "admittance card" inadvertently. One of the employes in his office collected three pieces of aluminum for the shower, and not until he started out to the club did he see the mark stamped on the back.

Among those arriving with assorted aluminum objects were Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, member of the Social Security Board; Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant FWA commissioner; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts; Mrs. George Pettengill, wife of Rear Admiral Pettengill, commandant of the Navy Yard; Mrs. Claude Swanson, widow of the former Secretary of Navy.

Probably the smallest object tossed into the aluminum bin was a thimble brought by Miss Virginia Price, who is in press-relations work.

Margaret Cook, 8, in a blue dress with red and white trimmings, stood at the bin to receive the donations.

Mrs. Marie McNair, president of the club, greeted members and guests who were served tea and cakes.

Mrs. Butler's Farewell Fete Set for July 20

Mrs. Neville Butler, wife of the British Minister, will be honored by the British War Relief Society and the Daughters of the British Empire with a farewell tea, which has been postponed from July 28 to July 30, at the Shoreham Hotel, it was announced yesterday.

Lady Halifax, wife of the British Ambassador and honorary national president of both organizations, will act as hostess.

Mrs. Butler will accompany her husband when he returns to England next month to become head of the American section of the foreign office.

Mrs. Butler directed the organization of the Washington branch of the British War Relief Society and was its first chairman. She has served also as chairman of the Queen Elizabeth Chapter of the Daughters of the British Empire.

Counselor to Speak

Miss Alice Wakefield, vocational counselor of Strayer College and member of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, will discuss counseling in business-training institutions, on the club's radio period over WINX at 3:15 p. m. tomorrow. She will be interviewed by Mrs. Miller Hickerson, of the club's publicity committee.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in her message to members in the new issue of the Federation's magazine outlines the subjects to be emphasized by its departments, along with the newly-created national defense department.

In American citizenship, courses in political science are advised in an endeavor to "show our women how outstanding our form of Government is." The American home department will emphasize a "return to religion in an effort to get our people away from materialistic thinking and to preserve our religious institutions."

The education department will stress adult education, character education, and vocational training. The latter will be "an attempt to prepare our young people for the many positions now available due to the national defense program."

The fine arts department will try to promote better relations of North and South America by developing more interest in the arts of all the countries. The international relations department will also work at the problem of strengthening ties between the Americas.

The work of these departments dovetails with the comprehensive defense program which the Federation has set up.

Mrs. Whitehurst in her message told clubwomen that "during the next three years we will have to help solve more complex problems than ever before in the history of our Federation and our country.

"If we face them together, with tolerance, kindliness and Christian fortitude, we may succeed in solving many of them. If we permit pettiness, self-aggrandizement and materialism to dominate our thinking, none will be solved and an unpleasant three years lie ahead."

Mrs. Whitehurst, who commutes between her home in Baltimore and her office here, has accepted a number of appointments to other organizations, since her recent election to presidency of the Federation.

Chaplain to Address Lutheran Women

"Obligations of the Church to the Soldiers in Government Service" will be discussed by Chaplain Joseph O. Ensrud of the office of the chief of chaplains, at the Lutheran Church of the Reformamation, Thursday night after the 6 o'clock dinner meeting of the Business and Professional Women's group.

Miss Catherine E. Edwards, Mrs. Grace Harllee, Mrs. Rose Covington, and Miss Lela Engleberger will be hostesses.

85 Registered For Girl Scout Day Camp

Eighty-five girls have registered for the second session of the Girl Scout "day camp" at Fort Dupont, which begins today, with a map-making course offered as one of the Scout defense activities.

Mrs. Lee Caldwell, camp director, explained that the girls are mapping the community in which the camp is located, noting schools, parks, churches and other landmarks.

The camp is in session from 9:30 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. daily from Tuesdays through Fridays in the Pine Wood picnic area at Fort Dupont, near the Anacostia Bridge.

Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District division, American Automobile Association, is instructing the Scouts in health and safety. Mrs. Austin Tucker heads the health and safety program at the camp.

Mrs. Ollie Palmore Long, who is in charge of arts and crafts, emphasizes the use of materials at hand. For modeling, the girls obtain clay from the banks of a stream running through the area. In woodcraft, they use a tree donated and cut down by park authorities.

At the "day camp" session which ended last Friday, the Scouts cut sections from the tree and made them into plaques, napkin rings and candleholders. They carved soles for wooden "scuffs" from patterns made from their own shoes. For the toe of the "scuffs" they have used burlap from potato sacks, on which they embroidered a design.

For outdoor cooking, the girls at the camp have a soup recipe developed by Mrs. Margaret Colson, a unit counselor, and her assistant, Mrs. Ruth Ragsdale.

Other activities for the camp include nature walks conducted by Donald McHenry; archery, directed by Miss Nora Kibbey; folk dancing and songs, Mrs. W. R. Bliss.

The session will end with a visitors' day and flag ceremony August 2.

Red Cross to Add Two More Evening Knitting Units

Two new units of the American Knitters will be organized at 7 o'clock tonight and tomorrow night at the District Chapter House of the Red Cross for weekly meetings, it was announced by Miss Myrtle-May Smith, director of American Knitters.

"Because of the heavy attendance at the Monday and Thursday evening units, it was thought advisable to open two more evenings for this work," Miss Smith said.

Instructors in both knitting and sewing will be on duty, since student as well as skilled workers are welcome, she added. Clubs or other groups may join as separate units "and will be credited for their work," Miss Smith said.

With the addition of these two new units, the chapter house will be open from 7 to 10 o'clock each evening from Monday through Thursday for sewing and knitting groups, she said.

Lady of Lourdes Court Discusses Aid to USO

How Court Our Lady of Lourdes, Catholic Daughters of America, Bethesda, can cooperate with the activities of the United Service Organizations was the chief topic of discussion at the monthly business meeting of the chapter, at the Chevy Chase Woman's Club last night.

Mrs. Catherine Burgdorf, delegate to the recent national convention of the organization, reported on the event. Mrs. Lucy Dunn, chairman of the board of trustees, presented the board's report. Mrs. Mary Spencer, regent of the chapter, presided.

Bethesda Woman's Club Plays Bridge Today

Mrs. Frank Farley, president of the club, has appointed the following to the entertainment committee: Mrs. Westfield Kailer, Mrs. George Schmucker, Mrs. Leonard Nicholson, Mrs. Lawrence Ring, Mrs. Gordon Biddle and Mrs. Robert C. Gilmore.

Guy Mason Named As Commissioner

In 1921, he was a member of the District Rent Commission.

Before leaving for Buffalo, N. Y. last night to handle a legal case for his firm—Mason, Spaulding & McAtee in the Tower Building—the genial, gray-haired lawyer said he would take over the Commissionership, if and when confirmed, with "no policies, no commitments and no obligations."

When Mason takes over his new duties, he will not succeed Hazen as president of the Board of Commissioners. The Commissioners select their own head. Commissioner Young is at present acting president and as ranking member in point of service will likely be chosen to preside over the board.

Commissioner Young, himelf a former newspaperman, said Washington "should feel fortunate" in Mason's selection.

"I think the appointment of Guy Mashon is a splendid one," said Young. "It will be like old times to work with him again."

Were Reporters Together

Explaining the two were "cub reporters" together, Young added:

"I have always had a high regard for his integrity and his ability, and it will be a pleasure to be associated with him. He has been a resident of our city for many years and knows the problems of the District, and I am sure will be a great help as a member of the Board of Commissioners."

Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz said he was not acquainted personally with Mason, but knew from reports he "is a capable executive."

"I am glad," said Gen. Kutz, "that he appointment was made so promptly. We have a great deal of work to do and we certainly need a 'full crew.'"

Indorsed by Trade Board

Mason received ready indorsement from the Washington Board of Trade. In a statement by the executive committee headed by President Fred Smith issued immediately following public announcement of the nomination, the trade group said:

"The executive committee of the Washington board of trade has learned with much pleasure of the appointment by the President of Guy Mason as Commissioner.

"The executive committee desires to express its genuine pleasure in Mr. Mason's appointment and to assure its full cooperation in whatever manner this organization can assist him."

Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech, who had been mentioned as a possible candidate for the Commissioner's post, said he had "known and admired" Mason for many years.

"He is a fine man," said Keech, "and the District is very fortunate to have a man like him in its service."

Praise For President

Keech also praised the President for his swift action—"especially in the face of his many problems of national and international importance."

"It shows the President has a sincere interest in the welfare of the District." Keech added.

Similar expressions of favor came from other city leaders, although in most instances they were not personally acquainted with Mason.

Mason is an ardent New Dealer. He has worked for the Democratic Party in all recent elections and as a newspaperman was closely associated with President Roosevelt when the latter was Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Mason was offered and accepted the nomination of Commissioner when he visited the White House Saturday.

McKimmie Retires After 45 Years In D. C. Service

After serving 45 years in the service of the District government, Simon McKimmie, principal assistant auditor, retired yesterday with brief ceremonies in the office of Auditor Arthur R. Pilkerton.

Pilkerton presented McKimmie with a cash gift and corsage for his wife in behalf of District Building associates. He paid high tribute to McKimmie, pointing out he never missed a day because of illness, during his entire service.

"He was a genuine friend of the District," Pilkerton added.

McKimmie came to the auditor's office on August 1, 1896. He served a brief time in the engineer office and returned to the auditor's office and was made principal assistant last July. He lives at 903 Allison Street Northwest.

Takoma Park Gardeners Hear Mrs. Harrison

Mrs. Arthur P. Harrison spoke on the "Heredity of Plants," yesterday at a meeting of the Takoma Park Garden Club at the Colesville home of Mrs. W. A. Nichols. To illustrate her talk, Mrs. Harrison showed plant specimens under a microscope.

Mrs. Louis O. Regeimbal, president of the club, presided at the meeting, which was followed by a picnic lunch in the garden.

ORCHIDS TO YOU—Margaret King, of 3038 Otis Street Northeast, is like many other girls in that she likes orchids. These are hybrid Cattleya.

The trend, gentlemen, when you're buying, is decidedly toward orchids.

Members of the Society of American Florists, in the fifty-seventh annual convention at the Wardman Park Hotel, have been saying informally that more orchids have been sold in the last year than ever before. Adolph E. Gude, 1318 I Street Northwest, president of the Middle Atlantic group at the convention, had no explanation for it—whether it was caused by more money in circulation or whether the girls had developed the technique of making their wants more clearly known.

The florists generally are looking for a business blessing to result from the war. The war is bringing a greater number of airplanes and, in consequence, the florists expect the vast number in existence after the war to help them move their flowers.

They talked yesterday of the advantages of many planes, bringing violets, roses, astors, gardenias and chrysanthemums from the West Coast to the East Coast overnight. In the convention exhibit is a new rose with a double center, the Rome Glory.

The convention will continue through Wednesday.

Japanse Cabinet, Army, Navy Chiefs Discuss War Problems

By Otto D. Tolischus

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, July 21.—Demonstrating its character of a wartime cabinet, the new Konoye government today held a conference with the army and navy departments of the imperial headquarters at the Emperor's palace at which agreement was reached on the closest possible cooperation between the civil administration and the fighting services.

At the same time Emperor Hirohito received in audience, first the Army Minister General Eiki Tojo, then the Navy Minister Admiral Koshiro Oikawa, then the Prime Minister Prince Fumimaro Konoye and finally the Foreign Minister Vice Admiral Teijiro Toyoda.

To relieve Prince Konoye of the justice ministry which he assumed temporarily together with the premiership, a new justice minister is expected to be appointed shortly.

Meanwhile, the commerce ministry and the leading insurance companies are discussing the problem of introducing bombing insurance because it is announced: "In view of the increasing tenseness of the world situation, bombings in Japan may become an actuality."

On the other hand, the Agriculture Minister Hiroyasu Ino, assured the country today that contrary to reports, which he attributed to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, there was plenty of rice and vegetables in Japan and that Japanese farmers would be soon producing more. He denied that Japan's rice was being shipped to China or any other country, and declared:

"If Chiang Kai-shek could see conditions in this country with his own eyes he would be a disillusioned man. I would like to refer him to foreigners who are amazed at the abundance of rice and other foods in this country."

The stock market turned soft. Its softness was attributed to the prospect of increased taxation as well as the complicated international situation.

Jailed 11 Days In Spain as Spy, U. S. Girl Reports

New York, July 21 (INS).—Young, blonde and foreign—if you are these and a girl in Spain then the officials decide that you are a spy.

That was the conviction of Miss Josephine Porter Winter, of St. Louis, who returned to the United States today on the American liner Exeter. She had been held 11 days in a Spanish prison as a spy suspect.

MISS WINTER

Miss Winter was in France when the Nazi invasion started. She left her studies at Sorbonne to drive an ambulance with the American volunteers. When France fell, she fled to Spain. She was arrested as a spy suspect and thrown into prison at Figueras.

Third Girl in 3 Days Found Slain in Mass.

By the United Press

Boston, July 21.—For the third time in three days, an eastern Massachusetts town was the scene of a brutal murder of a young woman. All were slain within a radius of 10 miles.

The latest victim was Miss Phyllis Chisholm, 24, whose body was found sprawled on the grass of a woodlot today while in a station wagon nearby was the body of Walter Brown, 37, her fiance, who had died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Ipswich authorities said that on the basis of notes left by Brown it was a case of murder and suicide. Miss Chisholm had been shot through the heart and died instantly in contrast to the other victims who had been ravished and unmercifully beaten or stabbed.

The other slain girls were Constance Shipp, 15, of Reading, and Frances M. Cochran, 19, of Lynn whose mutilated and battered bodies were discovered during the weekend after they had been missing for several days.

A curly haired "problem child," 15-year-old Raymond Woodward, broke down and wept in a private arraignment as he pleaded innocent to a charge of murdering Miss Shipp, a neighbor. As he was remanded to jail without bail pending grand jury action, a citizens committee prepared to take action against the police department.

The committee, headed by the Rev. Charles Lancaster of the Reading Episcopal Church, demands an explanation of why Woodward was allowed his freedom and why he had not been questioned earlier in view of his record. The youth—already on probation for an attempted attack on a Reading girl—was free on bail in connection with another, more recent attack on a North Andover girl.

Miss Shipp, whose eyes were gouged out, had been ravished, bludgeoned, stabbed and hacked to death in a Baptist parsonage. Besides wounds made by knives and blunt instruments, her body bore numerous teeth marks.

At Lynn, police were questioning men who had known Miss Cochran in the belief she had been lured to a deserted, wooded section by a person she knew well. It was believed an arrest might be near in her "bestial" murder as authorities traced autos similar to one she was seen to enter the day she disappeared.

Miss Cochran in her battle with her assailant had torn some hair from the man who raped her, kicked her face to a gory pulp, crushed her skull and battered her body so that it was almost unrecognizable. Her thighs were burned and a branch the size of a broomstick had been rammed down her throat.

Though the killings of Miss Cochran and Miss Shipp were similar in many ways, authorities said the only connection between them was the barbarism displayed by the murderers.

Johnny Select A Bright Boy, Tests Prove

Pvt. Johnny Selectee is smarter than Mr. Joe Citizen and the record shows it.

Tests covering about 130,000 trainees show that 47.13 per cent are above normal intelligence, whereas only 31 per cent of the population in general falls into the above normal group, the War Department has announced.

Take a bow, Johnny Selectee.

The Adjutant General's Office, which administers intelligence and aptitude tests, declared that "this extra complement of intelligence" was helping the selectees to "learn faster and learn more."

Private Selectee also is smarter than the brass hats thought he would be.

It had been estimated at the start of the Selective Service program last October that 7 per cent would be in intelligence group 1. Instead they found 9.51 fell in group 1, with corresponding increases in other classifications.

To make sure it gets the right men into the right Army jobs, the Adjutant General's office applies four types of tests to selectees: A general classification test which places men in intelligence groupings; a test of aptitude in mechanical and clerical lines; a non-language examination for those who cannot read or write English, and a minimum literacy test.

The tests have sped the job of getting the maximum amount of training into a year, it was said. In this way the commander does not have to waste time fumbling around trying to discover the capabilities of the men placed under him. Knowing their qualifications at the start, the report said, the commander's "training program moves at a faster pace and well-rounded teams are soon developed."

Capital Stock Tax Filing Period Extended

A 60-day extension of the period for filing capital stock tax returns was announced yesterday by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. The extension makes September 29 the last day for filing such returns.

LaGuardia Is Candidate For 3d Term

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia announced tonight he would run for a third term as chief city executive, but said his decision was "contrary to my preference."

In a radio address over Stations WOR and WYNC he declared he had been formally requested to become a candidate by many organizations, including the City Fusion Party, but that he had not been offered the Republican nomination.

It was the Fusion machine founded by Samuel Seabury that swept LaGuardia into City Hall in 1933.

Defining his position, the mayor asserted he would not permit his name to be entered in the Democratic primary, but urged his supporters in that party to work for the success of his ticket.

Democrats already have chosen their candidate—District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Kings County, whose smashing of the Brooklyn murder syndicate won him Nation-wide fame.

As for the Republican Party, which supported him four years ago, LaGuardia said he would not accept its nomination unless the party's enrolled voters placed him, City Comptroller Joseph D. McGoldrick and City Council President Newbold Morris on the G. O. P. ballot.

The mayor said his candidacy was against his own wishes, but he had decided to run because of repeated expressions of approval of his administration and appeals 'to continue the present non-partisan, non-political government for our city."

He said he had found the dual role of being New York's mayor as well as national director of civilian defense taxing, but that it was not beyond "human endurance."

The Fusionists made known their support of LaGuardia for the third time after a meeting this afternoon, presided over by Seabury. Their statement, addressed to the mayor, said in part:

"We urge you to consent to serve as our leader for four years more, if, as we do not doubt, a majority of the voters feel as we do."

The mayor said that he had been asked also to become a candidate by the American Labor Party, the City Affairs Committee, the Citizens Union, the Citizens Non-partisan Committee and other groups.

The issue, he declared, was clear-cut between "scientific, efficient, honest city government, non-political and non-partisan, and political, machine-controlled government."

Priority Set on Material To Build Locomotives

To alleviate "serious shortages of locomotives," the OPM Priorities Division yesterday announced the impending grant of the high preference rating A-3 to ten locomotive builders and about 60 repair plants.

The prospective orders, it was explained, will grant blanket preference ratings for delivery of all material entering into the new construction, repair and rebuilding of steam, electric and Diesel locomotives, whether for railroad, mining or industrial use.

Wallace Will Speak At Iowa Celebration

The War Department announced yesterday Vice President Wallace would deliver the principal address at ceremonies in Burlington, Iowa, July 31, marking the beginning of operations of the Iowa ordnance plant.

The Vice President will be introduced by Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa.

The first artillery shell assembled at the $30,000,000 plant will be presented to the city of Burlington by the ordnance department.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Agency Decentralization Being Brought to Head

Decentralization of Federal agencies is being brought to a head swiftly. Today is the deadline for department heads to recommend to the Budget Bureau the agencies they can most conveniently move to the field. This is the second report sent out by the bureau and if your agency didn't get a second report it means that your agency will remain here. If it did, it means the decentralization of your agency is being considered. All agencies made a first report. Before the week is out officials of the Budget Bureau and the heads of agencies involved will talk over moving plans. And unless the departments agree to do it voluntarily, the President can be expected to give the moving order.

Definitely slated to be moved out—either to Richmond or Hagerstown—is the fourth regional office of the Social Security Board at 1025 Vermont Avenue. The office serves the District, Maryland and West Virginia. No more than 40 employes would be transferred. An official of the Social Security Board said it was never intended to keep the regional office here and that it would have been moved even if it wasn't necessary.

The House yesterday agreed to Senate amendments to the uniform promotion plan. President Roosevelt is expected to sign the bill within a few days. The bill, vastly important to Federal employes, will become effective October 1 when approximately 200,000 workers will be given in-grade raises. Money to carry out the promotion plan now has to be voted and very little opposition is anticipated. After all, the bill made history for an employe reform measure. It passed the House and the Senate without a dissenting vote. Credit for getting the bill through so easily belongs to Budget Director Harold Smith, Representative Ramspeck and Senator Mead.

Overtime Pay

Representative Coffee of Washington, a member of the House Civil Service Committee, yesterday introduced a bill that should be popular with Federal workers. The bill provides: a 39-hour week for all Federal and District employes, time and a half for employes earning less than $3,200 who are compelled to work more than 39 hours from Monday through Saturday, but double time on Sunday. Employes who work any or part of the time between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m. would be given a 15 per cent pay raise.

Mayor LaGuardia, the Civil Defense boss, first refused to permit his staff to make carbon copies. There was much squawking and now one carbon is allowed . . . Westerners are putting the heat on the President to appoint an attorney general from the West. They fortify their argument by pointing out that not a single member of the cabinet or the Supreme Court is from the West . . . The "V for Victory" campaign was copied in part from a similar campaign conducted by the Treasury during World War I.

The House yesterday passed a bill that will pay draftees and other Federal employes called into the military forces their accumulated annual leave if the President signs it and he is expected to. The bill has been approved by the Senate . . . Two other Civil Service bills were blocked on objections of Representative Schulte. One would permit the FBI to re-hire retired employes and the other would put officials of the Indian Service and the General Land Office under the merit system.

United Federal Workers yesterday won an important victory in its battle to get Helen S. Miller reinstated at the Labor Department. Mrs. Miller was suspended on a Communist charge. J. P. Kennedy, a member of the C. I. O. union who is an employe of a New York Veterans Hospital, was accused of being a Communist by the F. B. I., according to the union. The union protested and the Veterans Administration has cleared Kennedy and closed the case.

Doorbells Ring Knell for Dictators as D. C. Prepares to Collect Scrap Aluminum

Post Staff Writer

Washington's doorbells rang loudly in a knell for the dictators yesterday.

Three thousand women asked the same question, "Have you any old aluminum to give for national defense?"

The words beat around Washington's air all day and persisted long after dark.

Tomorrow 3,000 Boy Scouts and American Legionnaires, in uniform, supported by 235 trucks, each of these with two laborers beside the driver, will collect the expected thousands of cast-off aluminum pots, pans, dishes, cocktail shakers and artificial legs, that the 3,000 canvassers got promises of yesterday.

The canvassers, to a woman, got "excellent" reception at every door, the Central Volunteer Bureau said. None quit during the day, or at least until the promised hours were up. None sent in a complaint. Each canvasser in the 13 precincts wore an identification card. When householders weren't home, handbills were put under doors, saying, in part:

"Today a representative of the District of Columbia Council of Defense called at your home to explain the aluminum collection. The collection of scrap aluminum is being made on a national scale to remedy a temporary shortage for the national defense program.

"Every pound of the aluminum collected will be used in national defense for military or naval equipment. Will you collect as many pieces as you can make available for Boy Scouts who will call at your front door July 23? . . . If you are not going to be at home please leave your contribution outside your front door. Police protection is to be arranged in the neighborhoods."

The aluminum will be taken by the trucks all day tomorrow to the park immediately in front of the District Building—the concentration point.

Then it will be sold to aluminum smelters who have defense preference ratings, and at the maximum prices prescribed by the Office of Price Administration. Behind the sales are the Office of Production Management and the United States Treasury Department. The OPM will allot the aluminum to the smelters. The Treasury Department will make the sales. The funds will go into the Federal Treasury, under no particular earmark. In all effect, the smelters will be paying the Government. And the smelters may sell only to aluminum fabricators with defense priorities, it was emphasized yesterday.

The collection trucks, lent for the day by the District Government and Washington business firms, will start the rounds at 8 a. m. tomorrow. The entire day will be spent at it if necessary, but the job is expected to be completed in 5 or 6 hours.

As a final word, Miss Harriet Elliott, associate administrator, OPM, has cautioned:

"Tell your friends and neighbors not to donate aluminum ware if that would make it necessary to purchase replacements immediately."

Meanwhile, at the national headquarters of the office of civilian defense, it was said that early reports from volunteer canvassers indicate the nation-wide drive will be more successful than hoped for.

It was estimated by some officials in Director F. H. LaGuardia's office that the campaign might return 30 million or 40 million pounds of aluminum instead of the 20 million earlier expected. It was said that telegrams have been coming in from cities all over the Nation reporting enthusiastic response.

Typical of the early reaction, it was pointed out, was that in Frederick, Md., where a survey of expected donations began yesterday. A chicken wire inclosure where the metal is to be dumped when actual collection starts tomorrow, is already half full of wornout pots and pans.

Duo-Pianists Steal the Show Before Large Watergate Crowd

Ignaz Waghalter conducts the National Symphony Orchestra on Monday night at the Potomac Watergate. Soloists: Jacques Fray and Mario Braggiotti, duo-pianists. Program: Overture to "Der Freischuetz" (Weber), "Spanish Concerto" for two pianos (Braggiotti), Symphony No. 5 in B minor (Chaikovski), "Austrian Rhapsody" (Waghalter), Caricature Variations on "Yankee Doodle" (Braggiotti), "Traeumerei" (Schumann), Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn), "Kaiser Walzer" (Strauss).

Last evening's audience assembled so leisurely at the Potomac Watergate for the seventh concert of the National Symphony Orchestra that there were no indications at the official opening hour that the crowd would eventually become one of the largest of the summer series. One would have attributed the tardiness to dubious weather, had the sky not been a cloudless blue. Whatever retarding causes there may have been, late comers kept on arriving during the early part of the program, the vacancies in the reserved sections were gradually filled, and the concourse turned out to be numerable in large figures and highly enthusiastic.

BROWN

One result of the slow gathering of the clans was an unusual addition to the picturesqueness of the scene. While the orchestra was playing theoverture to "Der Freischuetz," dozens of canoes began to appear around the bend in the river, coming downstream in the gloaming with riding lights in the prow. One could easily imagine what that sight would have meant to a spectator at that point two centuries ago—not the wending of music-lovers to their goal but the arrival of a band of Indians possibly bent upon other than peaceable pursuits.

Jacques Fray and Mario Braggiotti, engaged by the management at so late a moment that the original program had to be changed, became the focal point of the concert. In a good old phrase of the theater, they stole the show, and they did so in the most unmistakeable way. They are not among our most subtle and artistic piano teams, but they have a vigor and dash that captures popular acclaim, and on this occasion they were at the peak of their energetic style.

Their triumph did not come with the performance of Braggiotti's "Spanish Concerto," which is a flashy concoction of obvious Iberian characteristics, with some borrowing from Falla in harmony and rhythm. It was their second appearance later in the program that told the story.

To the delight of their admirers, they played one of their best-known pianistic skits—the variations on "Yankee Doodle" in the manner of Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy and Gershwin. This is clever work in caricature, emphasizing the salient traits of each composer and exaggerating the mannerisms in the true spirit of fun. They received an ovation which recalled them for two extra numbers: Ravel's "Bolero" and the lullaby from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

Ignaz Waghalter did not get the best out of the orchestra even in his own "Asturian Rhapsody," a weaving of folk themes and dance motives for which the audience gave him generous applause. Chaikovski's sixth symphony, lugubrious enough to start with, was made more saddening by the routine reading, the dragging of the slow tempi and the absence of vitalizing spirit. Other items on the program were a transcription of Schumann's "Traeumerei," which should never be played except on the piano for which it was written; the scherzo from Mendelssohn's incidental music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and the "Kaiser" waltz of Johann Strauss.

If the auditors were disappointed because there were no extra numbers, they had only themselves to blame. They had kept Fray and Braggiotti on the stage so long that the concert lasted until 10:30, the hour beyond which the musicians' contract does not allow them to play.

Shot by Blank, Man's Condition Is Still Critical

Edward Charles Foster, 48-year-old Navy Yard toolmaker, remained last night in critical condition at Casualty Hospital after being wounded by an "unloaded gun" at his home, 6713 Second Street Northwest, Sunday midnight. He has a blank-cartridge wound in the left side of his chest.

Police said his wife, Ruth, 28, related she pulled the trigger of her husband's .38-caliber revolver "in fun," thinking the gun was empty. She said her husband had taken the shells out of the gun and had been playing with it and then reloaded the revolver with blanks. She is being held for investigation at the Women's Bureau.

D.C. May Get $487,500 For Streets

House Passes, Sends to Senate Defense Roads Bill For 287 Millions

Large-scale national defense spending on highways in the District, Maryland and Virginia was foreshadowed last night after the House, on a voice vote, passed and sent back to the Senate a 287 million dollar defense roads bill.

While the measure carries no allocations for various localities, the Roads Committee, in reporting the bill to the House, listed "approximate amounts" that may be made available to the District and the various States from a 100 million-dollar authorization for improvement of the Nation's strategic highway network as drawn by the War Department.

The cost of improvements, as provided in the bill, would be shared by Federal and State governments, with the former bearing 75 per cent.

The committee listed the District's share at $487,500, Maryland's at $833,715 and Virginia's at $1,844,069, making a total of $3,165,384 likely to be spent by the Federal Government for road improvements in the three jurisdictions.

Network Begun Here

The bill also carries $150,000,000 for the construction and improvement of access roads to military and naval reservations and defense-industry sites and it is under this section of the measure that officials of the District, Maryland and Virginia anticipate that many more millions will be spent for highways.

District officials, for example, have actually started work on a system of roads ultimately expected to link the Anacostia and Pennsylvania Avenue bridges, the Naval Air Station, the Naval Research Laboratory at Blue Plains, the Naval Magazine and the Naval Powder Factory at Indianhead, Md. The Maryland connection, it is planned, will be built with the assistance of the State roads commission.

If the Federal Public Roads Administration which will have charge of allocations under the bill determines that these roads are to be classified as access highways, the $487,500 to which the District may be entitled under the Federal-aid section of the measure would be spent on other projects.

Grade Separation

The grade separation at the bottleneck at Fourteenth Street and Maine Avenue Southwest may be one of the projects on which Federal-aid funds could be spent. Money to start the project was included in the 1942 District Appropriation Act.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, has road improvement plans ready for presentation to Federal officials as soon as the bill becomes law.

In anticipation of the bill, Federal officials some time ago made an inventory of improvements necessary on network roads in Maryland nad Virginia to make the highways suitable for military use. Officials said that funds would be spent first in strengthening weak bridges in both States to make them capable of bearing tanks and other heavy pieces of motorized equipment. The next steps, it was said, will be to strengthen and widen highways. Only the broad outlines of the spending program have been worked out, it was said.

Flight Strips on Highways

Both States, it was pointed out, have many military and naval establishments as well as defense-industry sites to which it may be decided to build access roads.

The bill which the House substituted for a similar measure, which passed the Senate, carries, in addition to 250 million dollars to build access roads and correct critical deficiencies in strategic highways, 25 millions for repair of highways substantially damaged by the Army and Navy; 2 millions for construction of experimental flight strips on highways and 10 millions for surveys and plans.

Representative Mott (Republican), Oregon, described the measure as "an initial step" in a program to cost "upward of a billion dollars."

District Girl, 15, Tells Police 2 Men Abducted Her

A 15-year-old girl who lives in Southeast Washington, telephoned her mother from a downtown drugstore last night, and sobbed out to her the story of an eight-hour abduction.

She was mowing the lawn in her back yard in midafternoon, she later told police, when two men in an automobile picked her up. They drove her around down, stopped in a department store to buy her a $1.95 dress, and then one of them took her to a movie.

While leaving the theater, she broke away from the man, and ran down F Street. Noting that he was racing after her, she ducked into the drugstore and used the telephone. The men disappeared.

Perole Four Plays In D. C. Tonight

The Perole String Quartet will make its Washington debut at 8:15 tonight at the Meridian Hill Park Amphitheater in the third of the summer's Starlight Chamber Music Concerts.

The quartet, which has been conducting a Sunday noon broadcast over the Mutual Network for the last ten years, will play a three-number program consisting of Beethoven's "Quartet in C Minor, Opus 13, No. 4," Hugo Wolf's "Italian Serenade," and Dvorak's "American Quartet."

Committee Named By Van Nuys to Study FBI Staff for City

The stage was set for action on both sides of the Capitol last night on legislation to create a Federal Bureau of Investigation staff for the District as the House Police Investigation Subcommittee prepared to resume today executive study of recommendations for reorganization and improvement of the Metropolitan Police Department.

Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, yesterday named a special subcommittee of six members to conduct hearings on two Senate bills to give the FBI concurrent responsibility in investigation of District crimes.

One of the bills, introduced by Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, would make it the duty of an FBI staff to investigate treason, murder, rape, kidnaping, arson and manslaughhter in the District. Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, is the sponsor of a bill to authorize the FBI to assign its agents to all felonies here.

Hebert Offers Compromise Bill

A companion bill to the Herring measure was introduced in the House by Representative Hebert (Democrat), of Louisiana, a member of the investigating subcommittee.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, was selected as chairman of the special subcommittee which will consider the Herring and McKellar bills. Senator McCarran (Democat), of Nevada, chairman of the District Committee, and Senators Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky; Austin (Republican), of Vermont, and Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, are the other members. No date for a hearing has been set.

Hebert said he would ask House leaders for early action on the companion bill.

Police Speeding Charged

Since the close of hearings July 12, he said, information has come to the subcommittee indicating that motorcycle policemen sometimes "needlessly" drive at excessive speeds ranging from 45 to 60 miles an hour.

Complaints also have been received, he said, of motorcycle policemen traveling in pairs, rather than singly.

"There is absolutely no sense to motorcycle policemen operating in pairs," Schulte declared, "when Washington needs every man it can spare to keep down traffic violations on the streets.

"It appears that members of the motorcycle traffic detail have no set duties and no set routes to patrol. If what I hear is true, this division of the Police Department is due for a complete overhauling."

When the subcommittee resumes its deliberations with District officials at 10 o'clock this morning, Representative Hebert will be prepared to demand that its report be filed promptly, before "this thing cools off."

Schulte declared that the report will be ready in about ten days and that among its "drastic" recommendations the subcommittee will call for a shakeup of the "whole department" and compulsory retirement of all policemen over 65.

In this connection, it was recalled, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, has passed his sixty-sixth birthday.

Upbraided by Hebert yesterday for failure of the police department to enter one of its members in the FBI National Police Academy, Brown called attention to a recent letter of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover turning down a request of the District Commissioners for training three metropolitan precinct detectives at the school.

"In this connection," the letter read, "you are advised that the FBI National Police Academy . . . has as it primary purpose the training of police executives and instructors."

Brown also revealed that the name of Lieut. Loraine T. Johnson was submitted to the FBI for training July 5, but the request was turned down because the class that recently opened was filled. Johnson's name, Brown said, was submitted after the FBI declined to accept Capt. Earl Hartman because he is over the 46-year age limit. Hartman, head of the special investigations squad, known as the Police Department "Gestapo" during hearings of the Schulte subcommittee, was nominated for training May 21.

Whisky Ring Suspects Held Under Bond

A detective responding to a false burglar alarm last week yesterday told Police Court Judge Walter J. Casey how he broke up a ring of men who were taking whisky from Clark's, Inc., 705 Fourteenth Street Northwest, by carting out the liquor with trash collections.

As a result, three former employes of the concern, three trash collectors and a seventh man were all held under bond for action of the grand jury.

Precinct Detective D. A. Higgins, of the Ninth Precinct, said he responded with Detective Sergts. L. N. Wilson and E. E. Scott last Friday to an alarm at New York Avenue and Oakey Street Northeast. En route they picked up a man who was carrying a little satchel. The man said he was a barber and that he was taking his tools to his shop. It happened to be 11 p. m. and the policemen insisted on seeing the tools. These turned out to be four quart bottles of whisky.

The police said they were then able to trace the source of the liquor by the revenue stamps, which although removed from the four bottles, were found at the man's apartment in sweepings under a carpet.

Detective Higgins said Harris told him he received the whisky from some trash collectors who worked along Fourteenth Street Northwest. He then checked Clark's and waited for the trash wagon to load. He arrested the three men a short distance from the store and found four cases of whisky.

The barber was released under $500 bond on a charge of receiving stolen property. He is James E. Harris, 39, of 1903 Capitol Avenue Northeast. The three employes who worked in the stock room of the store, are William Pearsall, 23, of 317 Oakdale Street Northwest, under $500 bond; William G. Curtis, 22, of 1121 S Street Northwest, under $1,000 bond, and William H. Stromans, 23, of 1333 T Street Northwest, under $1,000 bond.

The three trash collectors, all charged with grand larceny, and held under $1,000 bond each, are Frank Brown, 20, 60 G Street Southwest; Louis E. Floyd, 45, 2110 Vermont Street Northwest, and Simpson Ready, 32, of 721 Euclid Street Northwest. They all pleaded not guilty.

Morgenthau Loses Suit for $4.86 In Overtime Case

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau became involved in extra-curricular money matters yesterday, when the United States Court of Appeals found against him to the amount of $4.86.

Harry A. Meyer, deputy surveyor of customs, worked overtime from 5 p. m. to 6:20 p. m. on January 7, 1940. He didn't get paid as much as he thought he should, so he brought suit against Morgenthau, both as an individual and as the Secretary of the Treasury. He also brought suit against the collector of customs and the steamship company which had employed his services.

The court decided he was right.

Appeals Court Rules Against Saul's Annulment Plea

"That the sweet may have turned sour" is not justification for annulling his marriage, the United States Court of Appeals told Bernard F. Saul yesterday in denying his appeal to nullify his marriage to Mrs. Mary Harding Saul, of the Westchester Apartments.

The court ruled that the millionnaire contractor must pay his wife $350 a month separate maintenance, and granted her custody of an 8-year-old son, affirming the decision of District Court Judge Oscar R. Luhring in 1938.

In his appeal, Saul stated that due to a technicality Mrs. Saul's divorce from her previous husband was not legal, and therefore her second marriage was illegal. However, the Appeal Court's decision stated that Saul knew this at the time of his marriage to Mrs. Saul, and told her to forget about the technicality.

Saul cannot "be allowed to undo what his own hand and mind had so much to do with creating," said the Court.

The nine-page decision affirming dismissal of the husband's annulment suit was given by Associate Justice Wiley Rutledge.

Miss Lee said she recogni... in a picture that appeared ... Post Sunday morning after the shooting of Ellen Cannon, ... whom he had quarreled.

Noting a resemblance between the face in the picture and that of the youth who came to her store, Miss Lee called Detective Tom McVeary who had been working on her case. McVeary arranged the special line-up which Oden appeared with five other young men.

He Confesses

"I knew it was him positively," Miss Lee said later. "I rememoered him clearly as he stood across my counter. He was so young, and before he told me it was a holdup I had thought he looked like such a nice boy."

When police brought the youth out of the line to confront Miss Lee, he confirmed her identification.

"Yes, I held you up," he confessed to her.

He also said he used the same gun—a .25 caliber revolver—in the holdup that he used when he fired through a kitchen screen door at Ellen Cannon. In his statement to police on the shooting he said he threw the gun away as he left the scene. Police picked him up on the street a few minutes later.

An inquest into the death of the Cannon girl will be held at 11:30 a. m. today in the District Morgue.

White House Butler Assaulted

Crime reported earlier in the day include the theft of more than $300 in cash, clothing valued at $165, and an automobile as District residents told police about a series of holdups and burglaries.

Among the victims was a White House butler, Armstead H. Barnett, who said he was assaulted while waiting for a traffic light at First and Michigan Avenue Northwest. Two men, he said, jumped on the side of his car, stuck a handkerchief-covered object against him, and asked him for money. They shoved him from his car and drove it away.

Frank Brady, owner of a candy shop at 1430 New York Avenue, reported that $103 was stolen from his shop about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He described a suspect to police.

Clara Bowman, manager of The Ranch, 10 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, reported thieves broke into the establishment by breaking a glass in the basement, and made off with an unknown amount from vending machines.

Gasoline Station Looted

John J. Davis, jr., proprietor of a gasoline station at Seventeenth Street and Benning Road Northeast, reported the place had been entered and $230 in bills and change taken from a desk drawer. He said entrance had been made by breaking a glass in a rear room.

Howard McKee, manager of the Connecticut Avenue Soda Bar, 1511 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, reported the place had been entered by cutting a screen from a rear basement window. A cash register containing about $53 was taken away.

Clothing valued at $165 was discovered missing from a basement locker in her apartment house yesterday by Mrs. William J. Flather, jr., 2101 Connecticut Avenue Northwest. She said that the locker had been entered by forcing the lock some time between the last part of April and yesterday.

$1,000 Brooch Stolen

Mrs. Louella M. Robbins, 2209 Wyoming Avenue Northwest, told police that a brooch containing eight diamonds and eight black sapphires was stolen from her apartment.

Mrs. Robbins said when she retired for the evening she put the brooch on a dresser and locked her door. When she awoke the following morning, she said, the pin was missing. Police placed its value at $1,000.

Meanwhile, police recovered the stolen wheel chair belonging to Chairman Mansfield of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee who last week interrupted an important Congressional hearing to announce the chair had been taken.

Pvt. P. F. Thorne of the Thirteenth Precinct recovered the wheel chair in a garage in the rear of 1832 Eleventh Street Northwest and returned it to the Representative.

Jailed 11 Days In Spain as Spy, U. S. Girl Reports

New York, July 21 (INS).—Young, blonde and foreign—if you are these and a girl in Spain then the officials decide that you are a spy.

That was the conviction of Miss Josephine Porter Winter, of St. Louis, who returned to the United States today on the American liner Exeter. She had been held 11 days in a Spanish prison as a spy suspect.

MISS WINTER

Miss Winter was in France when the Nazi invasion started. She left her studies at Sorbonne to drive an ambulance with the American volunteers. When France fell, she fled to Spain. She was arrested as a spy suspect and thrown into prison at Figueras.

Third Girl in 3 Days Found Slain in Mass.

By the United Press

Boston, July 21.—For the third time in three days, an eastern Massachusetts town was the scene of a brutal murder of a young woman. All were slain within a radius of 10 miles.

The latest victim was Miss Phyllis Chisholm, 24, whose body was found sprawled on the grass of a woodlot today while in a station wagon nearby was the body of Walter Brown, 37, her fiance, who had died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Ipswich authorities said that on the basis of notes left by Brown it was a case of murder and suicide. Miss Chisholm had been shot through the heart and died instantly in contrast to the other victims who had been ravished and unmercifully beaten or stabbed.

The other slain girls were Constance Shipp, 15, of Reading, and Frances M. Cochran, 19, of Lynn whose mutilated and battered bodies were discovered during the weekend after they had been missing for several days.

A curly haired "problem child," 15-year-old Raymond Woodward, broke down and wept in a private arraignment as he pleaded innocent to a charge of murdering Miss Shipp, a neighbor. As he was remanded to jail without bail pending grand jury action, a citizens committee prepared to take action against the police department.

The committee, headed by the Rev. Charles Lancaster of the Reading Episcopal Church, demands an explanation of why Woodward was allowed his freedom and why he had not been questioned earlier in view of his record. The youth—already on probation for an attempted attack on a Reading girl—was free on bail in connection with another, more recent attack on a North Andover girl.

Miss Shipp, whose eyes were gouged out, had been ravished, bludgeoned, stabbed and hacked to death in a Baptist parsonage. Besides wounds made by knives and blunt instruments, her body bore numerous teeth marks.

At Lynn, police were questioning men who had known Miss Cochran in the belief she had been lured to a deserted, wooded section by a person she knew well. It was believed an arrest might be near in her "bestial" murder as authorities traced autos similar to one she was seen to enter the day she disappeared.

Miss Cochran in her battle with her assailant had torn some hair from the man who raped her, kicked her face to a gory pulp, crushed her skull and battered her body so that it was almost unrecognizable. Her thighs were burned and a branch the size of a broomstick had been rammed down her throat.

Though the killings of Miss Cochran and Miss Shipp were similar in many ways, authorities said the only connection between them was the barbarism displayed by the murderers.

Johnny Select A Bright Boy, Tests Prove

Pvt. Johnny Selectee is smarter than Mr. Joe Citizen and the record shows it.

Tests covering about 130,000 trainees show that 47.13 per cent are above normal intelligence, whereas only 31 per cent of the population in general falls into the above normal group, the War Department has announced.

Take a bow, Johnny Selectee.

The Adjutant General's Office, which administers intelligence and aptitude tests, declared that "this extra complement of intelligence" was helping the selectees to "learn faster and learn more."

Private Selectee, also is smarter than the brass hats thought he would be.

It had been estimated at the start of the Selective Service program last October that 7 per cent would be in intelligence group 1. Instead they found 9.51 fell in group 1, with corresponding increases in other classifications.

To make sure it gets the right men into the right Army jobs, the Adjutant General's office applies four types of tests to selectees: A general classification test which places men in intelligence groupings; a test of aptitude in mechanical and clerical lines; a non-language examination for those who cannot read or write English, and a minimum literacy test.

The tests have sped the job of getting the maximum amount of training into a year, it was said. In this way the commander does not have to waste time fumbling around trying to discover the capabilities of the men placed under him. Knowing their qualifications at the start, the report said, the commander's "training program moves at a faster pace and well-rounded teams are soon developed."

LaGuardia Is Candidate For 3d Term

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia announced tonight he would run for a third term as chief city executive, but said his decision was "contrary to my preference."

In a radio address over Stations WOR and WYNC he declared he had been formally requested to become a candidate by many organizations, including the City Fusion Party, but that he had not been offered the Republican nomination.

It was the Fusion machine founded by Samuel Seabury that swept LaGuardia into City Hall in 1933.

Defining his position, the mayor asserted he would not permit his name to be entered in the Democratic primary, but urged his supporters in that party to work for the success of his ticket.

Democrats already have chosen their candidate—District Attorney William O'Dwyer of Kings County, whose smashing of the Brooklyn murder syndicate won him Nation-wide fame.

As for the Republican Party, which supported him four years ago, LaGuardia said he would not accept its nomination unless the party's enrolled voters placed him, City Comptroller Joseph D. McGoldrick and City Council President Newbold Morris on the G. O. P. ballot.

The mayor said his candidacy was against his own wishes, but he had decided to run because of repeated expressions of approval of his administration and appeals 'to continue the present non-partisan, non-political government for our city."

He said he had found the dual role of being New York's mayor as well as national director of civilian defense taxing, but that it was not beyond "human endurance."

The Fusionists made known their support of LaGuardia for the third time after a meeting this afternoon, presided over by Seabury. Their statement, addressed to the mayor, said in part:

"We urge you to consent to serve as our leader for four years more, if, as we do not doubt, a majority of the voters feel as we do."

The mayor said that he had been asked also to become a candidate by the American Labor Party, the City Affairs Committee, the Citizens Union, the Citizens Non-partisan Committee and other groups.

The issue, he declared, was clear-cut between "scientific, efficient, honest city government, non-political and non-partisan, and political, machine-controlled government."

Priority Set on Material To Build Locomotives

To alleviate "serious shortages of locomotives," the OPM Priorities Division yesterday announced the impending grant of the high preference rating A-3 to ten locomotive builders and about 60 repair plants.

The prospective orders, it was explained, will grant blanket preference ratings for delivery of all material entering into the new construction, repair and rebuilding of steam, electric and Diesel locomotives, whether for railroad, mining or industrial use.

Wallace Will Speak At Iowa Celebration

The War Department announced yesterday Vice President Wallace would deliver the principal address at ceremonies in Burlington, Iowa, July 31, marking the beginning of operations of the Iowa ordnance plant.

The Vice President will be introduced by Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa.

The first artillery shell assembled at the $30,000,000 plant will be presented to the city of Burlington by the ordnance department.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Agency Decentralization Being Brought to Head

Decentralization of Federal agencies is being brought to a head swiftly. Today is the deadline for department heads to recommend to the Budget Bureau the agencies they can most conveniently move to the field. This is the second report sent out by the bureau and if your agency didn't get a second report it means that your agency will remain here. If it did, it means the decentralization of your agency is being considered. All agencies made a first report. Before the week is out officials of the Budget Bureau and the heads of agencies involved will talk over moving plans. And unless the departments agree to do it voluntarily, the President can be expected to give the moving order.

Definitely slated to be moved out—either to Richmond or Hagerstown—is the fourth regional office of the Social Security Board at 1025 Vermont Avenue. The office serves the District, Maryland and West Virginia. No more than 40 employes would be transferred. An official of the Social Security Board said it was never intended to keep the regional office here and that it would have been moved even if it wasn't necessary.

The House yesterday agreed to Senate amendments to the uniform promotion plan. President Roosevelt is expected to sign the bill within a few days. The bill, vastly important to Federal employes, will become effective October 1 when approximately 200,000 workers will be given in-grade raises. Money to carry out the promotion plan now has to be voted and very little opposition is anticipated. After all, the bill made history for an employe reform measure. It passed the House and the Senate without a dissenting vote. Credit for getting the bill through so easily belongs to Budget Director Harold Smith, Representative Ramspeck and Senator Mead.

Overtime Pay

Representative Coffee of Washington, a member of the House Civil Service Committee, yesterday introduced a bill that should be popular with Federal workers. The bill provides: a 39-hour week for all Federal and District employes, time and a half for employes earning less than $3,200 who are compelled to work more than 39 hours from Monday through Saturday, but double time on Sunday. Employes who work any or part of the time between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m. would be given a 15 per cent pay raise.

Mayor LaGuardia, the Civil Defense boss, first refused to permit his staff to make carbon copies. There was much squawking and now one carbon is allowed . . . Westerners are putting the heat on the President to appoint an attorney general from the West. They fortify their argument by pointing out that not a single member of the cabinet or the Supreme Court is from the West . . . The "V for Victory" campaign was copied in part from a similar campaign conducted by the Treasury during World War I.

The House yesterday passed a bill that will pay draftees and other Federal employes called into the military forces their accumulated annual leave if the President signs it and he is expected to. The bill has been approved by the Senate . . . Two other Civil Service bills were blocked on objections of Representative Schulte. One would permit the FBI to re-hire retired employes and the other would put officials of the Indian Service and the General Land Office under the merit system.

United Federal Workers yesterday won an important victory in its battle to get Helen S. Miller reinstated at the Labor Department. Mrs. Miller was suspended on a Communist charge. J. P. Kennedy, a member of the C. I. O. union who is an employe of a New York Veterans Hospital, was accused of being a Communist by the F. B. I., according to the union. The union protested and the Veterans Administration has cleared Kennedy and closed the case.

Doorbells Ring Knell for Dictators as D. C. Prepares to Collect Scrap Aluminum

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

Washington's doorbells rang loudly in a knell for the dictators yesterday.

Three thousand women asked the same question, "Have you any old aluminum to give for national defense?"

The words beat around Washington's air all day and persisted long after dark.

Tomorrow 3,000 Boy Scouts and American Legionnaires, in uniform, supported by 235 trucks, each of these with two laborers beside the driver, will collect the expected thousands of cast-off aluminum pots, pans, dishes, cocktail shakers and artificial legs, that the 3,000 canvassers got promises of yesterday.

The canvassers, to a woman, got "excellent" reception at every door, the Central Volunteer Bureau said. None quit during the day, or at least until the promised hours were up. None sent in a complaint. Each canvasser in the 13 precincts wore an identification card. When householders weren't home, handbills were put under doors, saying, in part:

"Today a representative of the District of Columbia Council of Defense called at your home to explain the aluminum collection. The collection of scrap aluminum is being made on a national scale to remedy a temporary shortage for the national defense program.

"Every pound of the aluminum collected will be used in national defense for military or naval equipment. Will you collect as many pieces as you can make available for Boy Scouts who will call at your front door July 23? . . . If you are not going to be at home please leave your contribution outside your front door. Police protection is to be arranged in the neighborhoods."

The aluminum will be taken by the trucks all day tomorrow to the park immediately in front of the District Building—the concentration point.

Then it will be sold to aluminum smelters who have defense preference ratings, and at the maximum prices prescribed by the Office of Price Administration. Behind the sales are the Office of Production Management and the United States Treasury Department. The OPM will allot the aluminum to the smelters. The Treasury Department will make the sales. The funds will go into the Federal Treasury, under no particular earmark. In all effect, the smelters will be paying the Government. And the smelters may sell only to aluminum fabricators with defense priorities, it was emphasized yesterday.

The collection trucks, lent for the day by the District Government and Washington business firms, will start the rounds at 8 a. m. tomorrow. The entire day will be spent at it if necessary, but the job is expected to be completed in 5 or 6 hours.

As a final word, Miss Harriet Elliott, associate administrator, OPM, has cautioned:

"Tell your friends and neighbors not to donate aluminum ware if that would make it necessary to purchase replacements immediately."

Meanwhile, at the national headquarters of the office of civilian defense, it was said that early reports from volunteer canvassers indicate the nation-wide drive will be more successful than hoped for.

It was estimated by some officials in Director F. H. LaGuardia's office that the campaign might return 30 million or 40 million pounds of aluminum instead of the 20 million earlier expected. It was said that telegrams have been coming in from cities all over the Nation reporting enthusiastic response.

ALUMINUM COLLECTORS—Mrs. Coleman Stein (left), of the Westchester Apartments, pins on her identification card. Mrs. Franklin Wolf (right), also of the Westchester, puts a handbill under the door of an apartment, where she found no one at home

Typical of the early reaction, it was pointed out, was that in Frederick, Md., where a survey of expected donations began yesterday. A chicken wire inclosure where the metal is to be dumped when actual collection starts tomorrow, is already half full of wornout pots and pans.

Shot by Blank, Man's Condition Is Still Critical

Edward Charles Foster, 48-year-old Navy Yard toolmaker, remained last night in critical condition at Casualty Hospital after being wounded by an "unloaded gun" at his home, 6713 Second Street Northwest, Sunday midnight. He has a blank-cartridge wound in the left side of his chest.

Police said his wife, Ruth, 28, related she pulled the trigger of her husband's .38-caliber revolver "in fun," thinking the gun was empty. She said her husband had taken the shells out of the gun and had been playing with it and then reloaded the revolver with blanks. She is being held for investigation at the Women's Bureau.

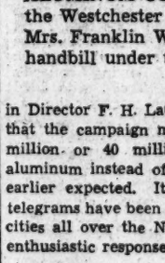
Duo-Pianists Steal the Show Before Large Watergate Crowd

Ignaz Waghalter conducts the National Symphony Orchestra on Monday night at the Potomac Watergate. Soloists: Jacques Fray and Mario Braggiotti, duo-pianists. Program: Overture to "Der Freischuetz" (Weber), "Spanish Concerto" for two pianos (Braggiotti), Symphony No. 6 in B minor (Chaikovski), "Austrian Rhapsody" (Waghalter), Caricature Variations on "Yankee Doodle" (Braggiotti), "Traeumerei" (Schumann), Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn), "Kaiser Walzer" (Strauss).

Last evening's audience assembled so leisurely at the Potomac Watergate for the seventh concert of the National Symphony Orchestra that there were no indications at the official opening hour that the crowd would eventually become one of the largest of the summer series. One would have attributed the tardiness to dubious weather, had the sky not been a cloudless blue. Whatever retarding causes there may have been, late comers kept on arriving during the early part of the program, the vacancies in the reserved sections were gradually filled, and the concourse turned out to be numerable in large figures and highly enthusiastic.



BROWN

One result of the slow gathering of the clans was an unusual addition to the picturesqueness of the scene. While the orchestra was playing theoverture to "Der Freischuetz," dozens of canoes began to appear around the bend in the river, coming downstream in the gloaming with riding lights in the prow. One could easily imagine what that sight would have meant to a spectator at that point two centuries ago—not the wending of music-lovers to their goal but the arrival of a band of Indians possibly bent upon other than peaceable pursuits.

Jacques Fray and Mario Braggiotti, engaged by the management at so late a moment that the original program had to be changed, became the focal point of the concert. In a good old phrase of the theater, they stole the show, and they did so in the most unmistakeable way. They are not among our most subtle and artistic piano teams, but they have a vigor and dash that captures popular acclaim, and on this occasion they were at the peak of their energetic style.

Their triumph did not come with the performance of Braggiotti's "Spanish Concerto," which is a flashy concoction of obvious Iberian characteristics, with some borrowing from Falla in harmony and rhythm. It was their second appearance later in the program that told the story.

To the delight of their admirers, they played one of their best-known pianistic skits—the variations on "Yankee Doodle" in the manner of Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy and Gershwin. This is clever work in caricature, emphasizing the salient traits of each composer and exaggerating the mannerisms in the true spirit of fun. They received an ovation which recalled them for two extra numbers: Ravel's "Bolero" and the lullaby from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

Ignaz Waghalter did not get the best out of the orchestra even in his own "Asturian Rhapsody," a weaving of folk themes and dance motives for which the audience gave him generous applause. Chaikovski's sixth symphony, lugubrious enough to start with, was made more saddening by the routine reading, the dragging of the slow tempi and the absence of vitalizing spirit. Other items on the program were a transcription of Schumann's "Traeumerei," which should never be played except on the piano for which it was written; the scherzo from Mendelssohn's incidental music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and the "Kaiser" waltz of Johann Strauss.

If the auditors were disappointed because there were no extra numbers, they had only themselves to blame. They had kept Fray and Braggiotti on the stage so long that the concert lasted until 10:30, the hour beyond which the musicians' contract does not allow them to play.

D.C. May Get $487,500 For Streets

House Passes, Sends to Senate Defense Roads Bill For 287 Millions

Large-scale national defense spending on highways in the District, Maryland and Virginia was foreshadowed last night after the House, on a voice vote, passed and sent back to the Senate a 287 million dollar defense roads bill.

While the measure carries no allocations for various localities, the Roads Committee, in reporting the bill to the House, listed "approximate amounts" that may be made available to the District and the various States from a 100 million-dollar authorization for improvement of the Nation's strategic highway network as drawn by the War Department.

The cost of improvements, as provided in the bill, would be shared by Federal and State governments, with the former bearing 75 per cent.

The committee listed the District's share at $487,500, Maryland's at $833,715 and Virginia's at $1,844,069, making a total of $3,165,384 likely to be spent by the Federal Government for road improvements in the three jurisdictions.

Network Begun Here

The bill also carries $150,000,000 for the construction and improvement of access roads to military and naval reservations and defense-industry sites and it is under this section of the measure that officials of the District, Maryland and Virginia anticipate that many more millions will be spent for highways.

District officials, for example, have actually started work on a system of roads ultimately expected to link the Anacostia and Pennsylvania Avenue bridges, the Naval Air Station, the Naval Research Laboratory at Blue Plains, the Naval Magazine and the Naval Powder Factory at Indianhead, Md. The Maryland connection, it is planned, will be built with the assistance of the State roads commission.

If the Federal Public Roads Administration which will have charge of allocations under the bill determines that these roads are to be classified as access highways, the $487,500 to which the District may be entitled under the Federal-aid section of the measure would be spent on other projects.

Grade Separation

The grade separation at the bottleneck at Fourteenth Street and Maine Avenue Southwest may be one of the projects on which Federal-aid funds could be spent. Money to start the project was included in the 1942 District Appropriation Act.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, has road improvement plans ready for presentation to Federal officials as soon as the bill becomes law.

In anticipation of the bill, Federal officials some time ago made an inventory of improvements necessary on network roads in Maryland nad Virginia to make the highways suitable for military use. Officials said that funds would be spent first in strengthening weak bridges in both States to make them capable of bearing tanks and other heavy pieces of motorized equipment. The next steps, it was said, will be to strengthen and widen highways. Only the broad outlines of the spending program have been worked out, it was said.

Flight Strips on Highways

Both States, it was pointed out, have many military and naval establishments as well as defense-industry sites to which it may be decided to build access roads.

The bill which the House substituted for a similar measure, which passed the Senate, carries, in addition to 250 million dollars to build access roads and correct critical deficiencies in strategic highways, 25 millions for repair of highways substantially damaged by the Army and Navy; 2 millions for construction of experimental flight strips on highways and 10 millions for surveys and plans.

Representative Mott (Republican), Oregon, described the measure as "an initial step" in a program to cost "upward of a billion dollars."

District Girl, 15, Tells Police 2 Men Abducted Her

A 15-year-old girl who lives in Southeast Washington, telephoned her mother from a downtown drugstore last night, and sobbed out to her the story of an eight-hour abduction.

She was mowing the lawn in her back yard in midafternoon, she later told police, when two men in an automobile picked her up. They drove her around down, stopped in a department store to buy her a $1.95 dress, and then one of them took her to a movie.

While leaving the theater, she broke away from the man, and ran down F Street. Noting that he was racing after her, she ducked into the drugstore and used the telephone. The men disappeared.

Perole Four Plays In D. C. Tonight

The Perole String Quartet will make its Washington debut at 8:15 tonight at the Meridian Hill Park Amphitheater in the third of the summer's Starlight Chamber Music Concerts.

The quartet, which has been conducting a Sunday noon broadcast over the Mutual Network for the last ten years, will play a three-number program consisting of Beethoven's "Quartet in C Minor, Opus 13, No. 4," Hugo Wolf's "Italian Serenade," and Dvorak's "American Quartet."

Youth Who Killed Sweetheart, Identified in Holdup by Victim

Committee Named By Van Nuys to Study FBI Staff for City

The stage was set for action on both sides of the Capitol last night on legislation to create a Federal Bureau of Investigation staff for the District as the House Police Investigation Subcommittee prepared to resume today executive study of recommendations for reorganization and improvement of the Metropolitan Police Department.

Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, yesterday named a special subcommittee of six members to conduct hearings on two Senate bills to give the FBI concurrent responsibility in investigation of District crimes.

One of the bills, introduced by Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, would make it the duty of an FBI staff to investigate treason, murder, rape, kidnaping, arson and manslaughter in the District. Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, is the sponsor of a bill to authorize the FBI to assign its agents to all felonies here.

Hebert Offers Compromise Bill

A companion bill to the Herring measure was introduced in the House by Representative Hebert (Democrat), of Louisiana, a member of the investigating subcommittee.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, was selected as chairman of the special subcommittee which will consider the Herring and McKellar bills. Senator McCarran (Democat), of Nevada, chairman of the District Committee, and Senators Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky; Austin (Republican), of Vermont, and Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, are the other members. No date for a hearing has been set.

Hebert said he would ask House leaders for early action on the companion bill.

Police Speeding Charged

Since the close of hearings July 12, he said, information has come to the subcommittee indicating that motorcycle policemen sometimes "needlessly" drive at excessive speeds ranging from 45 to 60 miles an hour.

Complaints also have been received, he said, of motorcycle policemen traveling in pairs, rather than singly.

"There is absolutely no sense to motorcycle policemen operating in pairs," Schulte declared, "when Washington needs every man it can spare to keep down traffic violations on the streets.

"It appears that members of the motorcycle traffic detail have no set duties and no set routes to patrol. If what I hear is true, this division of the Police Department is due for a complete overhauling."

When the subcommittee resumes its deliberations with District officials at 10 o'clock this morning, Representative Hebert will be prepared to demand that its report be filed promptly, before "this thing cools off."

Schulte declared that the report will be ready in about ten days and that among its "drastic" recommendations the subcommittee will call for a shakeup of the "whole department" and compulsory retirement of all policemen over 65.

In this connection, it was recalled, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, has passed his sixty-sixth birthday.

Upbraided by Hebert yesterday for failure of the police department to enter one of its members in the FBI National Police Academy, Brown called attention to a recent letter of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover turning down a request of the District Commissioners for training three metropolitan precinct detectives at the school.

"In this connection," the letter read, "you are advised that the FBI National Police Academy . . . has as it primary purpose the training of police executives and instructors."

Brown also revealed that the name of Lieut. Loraine T. Johnson was submitted to the FBI for training July 5, but the request was turned down because the class that recently opened was filled. Johnson's name, Brown said, was submitted after the FBI declined to accept Capt. Earl Hartman because he is over the 46-year age limit. Hartman, head of the special investigations squad, known as the Police Department "Gestapo" during hearings of the Schulte subcommittee, was nominated for training May 21.

Oden Confesses Robbery of Cleaning Shop a Week Ago

Guy Oden, 19-year-old youth who has confessed the killing of his schoolgirl sweetheart, was identified last night as the young man who held up the manager of a cleaning establishment last Tuesday and robbed her of $25.

The manager, Miss Ida Lee, of 517 Ninth Street Southeast, picked Oden out of a surprise police line-up and told police he was the one who appeared in her store near her home last week with a gun.

Miss Lee said she recognized Oden in a picture that appeared in The Post Sunday morning after the fatal shooting of Ellen Cannon, with whom he had quarreled.

Noting a resemblance between the face in the picture and that of the youth who came to her store, Miss Lee called Detective Tom McVeary who had been working on her case. McVeary arranged the special line-up which Oden appeared with five other young men.

He Confesses

"I knew it was him positively," Miss Lee said later. "I rememoered him clearly as he stood across my counter. He was so young, and before he told me it was a holdup I had thought he looked like such a nice boy."

When police brought the youth out of the line to confront Miss Lee, he confirmed her identification.

"Yes, I held you up," he confessed to her.

He also said he used the same gun—a .25 caliber revolver—in the holdup that he used when he fired through a kitchen screen door at Ellen Cannon. In his statement to police on the shooting he said he threw the gun away as he left the scene. Police picked him up on the street a few minutes later.

An inquest into the death of the Cannon girl will be held at 11:30 a. m. today in the District Morgue.

White House Butler Assaulted

Crime reported earlier in the day include the theft of more than $300 in cash, clothing valued at $165, and an automobile as District residents told police about a series of holdups and burglaries.

Among the victims was a White House butler, Armstead H. Barnett, who said he was assaulted while waiting for a traffic light at First and Michigan Avenue Northwest. Two men, he said, jumped on the side of his car, stuck a handkerchief-covered object against him, and asked him for money. They shoved him from his car and drove it away.

Frank Brady, owner of a candy shop at 1430 New York Avenue, reported that $103 was stolen from his shop about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He described a suspect to police.

Clara Bowman, manager of The Ranch, 10 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, reported thieves broke into the establishment by breaking a glass in the basement, and made off with an unknown amount from vending machines.

Gasoline Station Looted

John J. Davis, jr., proprietor of a gasoline station at Seventeenth Street and Benning Road Northeast, reported the place had been entered and $230 in bills and change taken from a desk drawer. He said entrance had been made by breaking a glass in a rear room.

Howard McKee, manager of the Connecticut Avenue Soda Bar, 1511 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, reported the place had been entered by cutting a screen from a rear basement window. A cash register containing about $53 was taken away.

Clothing valued at $165 was discovered missing from a basement locker in her apartment house yesterday by Mrs. William J. Flather, jr., 2101 Connecticut Avenue Northwest. She said that the locker had been entered by forcing the lock some time between the last part of April and yesterday.

$1,000 Brooch Stolen

Mrs. Louella M. Robbins, 2209 Wyoming Avenue Northwest, told police that a brooch containing eight diamonds and eight black sapphires was stolen from her apartment.

Mrs. Robbins said when she retired for the evening she put the brooch on a dresser and locked her door. When she awoke the following morning, she said, the pin was missing. Police placed its value at $1,000.

Meanwhile, police recovered the stolen wheel chair belonging to Chairman Mansfield of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee who last week interrupted an important Congressional hearing to announce the chair had been taken.

Pvt. P. F. Thorne of the Thirteenth Precinct recovered the wheel chair in a garage in the rear of 1832 Eleventh Street Northwest and returned it to the Representative.

Whisky Ring Suspects Held Under Bond

A detective responding to a false burglar alarm last week yesterday told Police Court Judge Walter J. Casey how he broke up a ring of men who were taking whisky from Clark's, Inc., 705 Fourteenth Street Northwest, by carting out the liquor with trash collections.

As a result, three former employes of the concern, three trash collectors and a seventh man were all held under bond for action of the grand jury.

Precinct Detective D. A. Higgins, of the Ninth Precinct, said he responded with Detective Sergts. L. N. Wilson and E. E. Scott last Friday to an alarm at New York Avenue and Oakey Street Northeast. En route they picked up a man who was carrying a little satchel. The man said he was a barber and that he was taking his tools to his shop. It happened to 11 p. m. and the policemen insisted on seeing the tools. These turned out to be four quart bottles of whisky.

The police said they were then able to trace the source of the liquor by the revenue stamps, which although removed from the four bottles, were found at the man's apartment in sweepings under a carpet.

Detective Higgins said Harris told him he received the whisky from some trash collectors who worked along Fourteenth Street Northwest. He then checked Clark's and waited for the trash wagon to load. He arrested the three men a short distance from the store and found four cases of whisky.

The barber was released under $500 bond on a charge of receiving stolen property. He is James E. Harris, 39, of 1903 Capitol Avenue Northeast. The three employes who worked in the stock room of the store, are William Pearsall, 23, of 317 Oakdale Street Northwest, under $500 bond; William G. Curtis, 22, of 1121 S Street Northwest, under $1,000 bond, and William H. Stromans, 23, of 1333 T Street Northwest, under $1,000 bond.

The three trash collectors, all charged with grand larceny, and held under $1,000 bond each, are Frank Brown, 20, 60 G Street Southwest; Louis E. Floyd, 45, 2110 Vermont Street Northwest, and Simpson Ready, 32, of 721 Euclid Street Northwest. They all pleaded not guilty.

Morgenthau Loses Suit for $4.86 In Overtime Case

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau became involved in extracurricular money matters yesterday, when the United States Court of Appeals found against him to the amount of $4.86.

Harry A. Meyer, deputy surveyor of customs, worked overtime from 5 p. m. to 6:20 p. m. on January 7, 1940. He didn't get paid as much as he thought he should, so he brought suit against Morgenthau, both as an individual and as the Secretary of the Treasury. He also brought suit against the collector of customs and the steamship company which had employed his services.

The court decided he was right.

Appeals Court Rules Against Saul's Annulment Plea

"That the sweet may have turned sour" is not justification for annulling his marriage, the United States Court of Appeals told Bernard F. Saul yesterday in denying his appeal to nullify his marriage to Mrs. Mary Harding Saul, of the Westchester Apartments.

The court ruled that the millionnaire contractor must pay his wife $350 a month separate maintenance, and granted her custody of an 8-year-old son, affirming the decision of District Court Judge Oscar R. Luhring in 1938.

In his appeal, Saul stated that due to a technicality Mrs. Saul's divorce from her previous husband was not legal, and therefore her second marriage was illegal. However, the Appeal Court's decision stated that Saul knew this at the time of his marriage to Mrs. Saul, and told her to forget about the technicality.

Saul cannot "be allowed to undo what his own hand and mind had so much to do with creating," said the Court.

Mrs. Butler and Mrs. Goodman Win Post Cups

Mrs. Meckley Takes Gross In Class A

Mrs. Connolly Wins Class B Gross Honors At Congressional Club; Ties Mark·Net Prizes

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Washington Post trophy tournaments brought out the best golf ever played by Mrs. R. S. Butler, of Kenwood, and Mrs. H. H. Goodman, of Washington, and as a result they were crowned Class A and Class B champions, respectively, yesterday at Manor and Congressional clubs.

Mrs. Butler, who first took up the game three years ago, broke her own personal scoring record by a stroke at Manor Club with a 94 and minus a handicap of 18 gave her a net 76, low for the day by a single stroke.

Mrs. Goodman, who has been playing only since Easter of this year, also posted her lowest score over the long Congressional course, a 111, and minus 34 handicap strokes her net 77 won the Class B cup by a 2-shot margin.

Diffenbaugh Proteges

The victories were somewhat of a personal triumph for George Diffenbaugh, the Kenwood Club professional, who has started hundreds of District golfers off on the right foot, for they have both been under his tutelage since first swinging a club.

Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, the current and three-time Maryland State champion, captured gross honors in the ninth annual Class A competition at Manor with a fine round of 80, a round where she hit all shots like a champion. With a little more luck on the greens she could have carded a 75. Mrs. Meckley just missed a tie for the cup by a shot with 80-3, 77.

Mrs. John S. Connolly, winner of low gross in the recent Star Cup play, came back in The Post Cup competition to again pace the Class B players, this time with a score of 101. Mrs. Connolly, wife of the Fairfax Golf Club owner, has been a golfer for only four years.

Of the original 80 entries in Class A, 62 played but 29 returned no cards. In Class B, 62 of the 84 entries competed but 33 returned no cards. Scoring was higher than expected in both low and high handicapped divisions of the tournament.

Mrs. Edward Fox, tournament chairman of the association, had quite a problem in Class A as five with net scores of 78 deadlocked for the next five prizes. Winners were determined, first by matching cards and then, after more ties resulted, the lowest handicapped players received a preference.

Kenwood Woman Star

Kenwood continued its prize monopoly as Mrs. H. W. Sharpe won second low net with a consistent 90, 12 handicap for a net 78. Third went to Mrs. Lafayette Franklin, of Washington, with 95-17, 78. Mrs. Franklin was low gross winner in the recent Duffer's tournament and that score promoted her to Class A for yesterday's play.

Mrs. L. G. Pray, a former host club champion, posted the second-best round of the day, a 40, 42—82, and minus four handicap strokes for a net 78, won fourth low net. Mrs. Henry Goodman, of Woodmont's championship second team, was next with 90—12—78, and Mrs. Kurtz Hanson, of Chevy Chase, completed the prize bracket with 94—16—78, including a back nine of 45 after a 49 start.

Mrs. Myron Davy, Columbia's State finalist, included three birdies in an out nine of 37, best nine of the day, but after a delay on the tenth tee Mrs. Davy required 45 strokes on the back nine for an 82. Mrs. W. R. Stokes, the District and

Riggs Paces Net Advance At Sea Bright

By the Associated Press

Sea Bright, N. J., July 21.—Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, the defending men's champion, and the four seeded favorites in the women's field scored impressive first-round victories in the fifty-fourth annual Sea Bright Invitation tennis tournament today as the Nation's top-ranking stars came together in the first major tournament of the season on grass.

Riggs opened quest of his fourth Sea Bright singles crown with an easy 6—1, 6—2 triumph over J. Upshur Moorhead, of Rumson, N. J. The former national titleholder, seeded second, won his first championship here in 1937, repeated in 1938 and retired the second Sea Bright Challenge Bowl last year. He seeks now to become the first player in the tournament's history to capture the title a fourth time.

Mrs. Cooke Advances

Top-seeded Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke, of New York, led the quartet of favored feminine performers into the second round by outclassing Mrs. M. H. Vosters, jr., of Sea Bright, 6—0, 6—0.

Second-seeded Helen Hull Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif., also a three-time winner here, brushed aside Mrs. Elliott Coleman, of Sea Bright, 6—1, 6—0. Dorothy May Bunday, of Santa Monica, Calif., No. 3, won from Dorothy Wightman, Boston, 6—3, 6—4, and Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco, No. 4, polished off Cecile Bowes, of Philadelphia, 6—0, 6—1.

The only other seeded player in the men's field who saw action was little Francisco (Pancho) Segura, of Ecuador, the South American with the two-fisted forehand. Segura, second on the foreign list, gained his second-round berth at the expense of E. Blair Hawley, of New York, 6—3, 6—3.

Four Stars Draw Byes

The draw placed all of the other seeded entrants in the second round on byes, including top-seeded Don McNeill, the national champion from Oklahoma City, Okla.; Frankie Parker, of Altadena, Calif., Sea Bright champion in 1939, and Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif., runner-up to Riggs here last year. All are scheduled to play tomorrow.

A pair of mild upsets were sprung by Arthur Marx, of Beverly Hills, Calif., and William Canning, of Hidden Valley, Calif. Marx trounced Gilbert A. Hunt, jr., of Providence, fourteenth on the national list, 6—0, 6—2, winning the first eight games in a row. Canning disposed of E. Victor Seixas, of Philadelphia, the National Interscholastic champion, 6—4, 6—4.

Hartley Ring Bill Delayed; Sponsor Ill

More authority for the District Boxing Commission and salaries for the commissioners will be sought in a bill to be submitted to Congress by Representative Fred J. Hartley, of New Jersey, it was learned yesterday.

Congressman Hartley, currently ill at his New Jersey home, will introduce the bill on his return to the city, it was stated by his office here.

The two civilian members on the three-man commission would receive annual salaries of $3,000 under the terms of the bill. When boxing was legalized here in 1934, it was stipulated that the commissionerships were to be nonsalaried posts.

Amendments to the present boxing law, approved by the commissioners, would also bring supervision of wrestling within the scope of the commission and permit the boxing body to exact a 10 per cent tax on all admission fees to fighters' training camps.

One section of Hartley's bill, seeking greater authority for the commission, provides that "the commission shall have the power to make and amend such orders, rules and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred on it."

Sammy Angott Beaten In Non-Title Fight

Ray Robinson Floors Champ in Overweight Bout for First Time in Career at Shibe Park

By the United Press

Philadelphia, July 21.—Ray (Sugar) Robinson, a story-book kid from Harlem, fought his way into the front ranks of lightweight championship contenders tonight when he defeated Sammy Angott, the N. B. A. titleholder, in a ten-round bout at Shibe Park.

Out of the amateur ranks less than a year, Robinson won his 121st consecutive fight—21 of them as a pro—with a driving two-fisted attack that put Angott on the floor for the first time in the Louisville battler's ring career.

May Cost Title Shot

The defeat may cost Angott a shot at Lightweight Champion Lew Jenkins. Promoter Mike Jacobs matched them for a bout in Madison Square Garden on October 3, but when Sammy signed for the Robinson fight he was told he would have to win in order to get a crack at the crown.

Angott's N. B. A. title was not at stake tonight as Robinson weighed 136½—1½ pounds over the limit. Angott weighed the same.

His timing badly off, Angott came off the floor to lead the fighting and twice had Robinson groggy and against the ropes. But each time the Negro battler fought his way out of danger. Robinson took a severe body beating but he kept Angott's head bobbing for the greater part of the fight.

Kutcher gave Robinson six rounds, with three for Angott and one even. The judges, Harry Lacky and Ed Loughran, both scored seven for Robinson, two for Angott and one even.

14,500 Attend

The first round, which saw Angott slip for a two-count, was even and the second round was half spent when Robinson put over the knockdown blow. Angott landed on his face, completely out, and less courageous boxers never would have gotten up. But he hung on to last out the round. Still groggy, he managed to weather the third and rallied in the fourth to win the round decisively. He had Robinson or the ropes, and just as it looked like the Negro battler's Philadelphia jinx would be broken, Robinson managed to duck a right that might have ended the fight.

From that time on, except for the seventh, Robinson stayed in front to continue the string of victories which has made this city his happy hunting ground. He has fought here eight times and won seven of the bouts by knockouts.

Leonard Hurls For Nats Today Against Tigers

The Nats move back into Griffith Stadium today and face the one team they have been able to lick with consistency this season—the Detroit Tigers. Despite their lowly cellar berth, the Nats have beaten the Tigers 8 times in 12 regular games.

On their Western trip the Nats won five games and lost six, but retreated into eighth place following a spurt by the Browns, who have won seven of their last eight games.

Dutch Leonard, who beat the Tigers at Detroit with a six-hit performance in his last start, will go to the mound for the Nats today. He will be opposing Dizzy Trout, the Tigers' leading pitcher, who beat the Nats on the day following Leonard's victory. It was Trout who held Cecil Travis hitless to check the latter's 24-game hitting streak last week.

Today's game starts a three-game series with the Tigers, who will be followed into Griffith Stadium by all of the other Western clubs.

Owner Clark Griffith was in session with Manager Bucky Harris yesterday, but made no disclosures concerning new talent. "We will bring some players in soon, but I can't tell who they will be at this time," said Griffith.

The Nats' owner is reluctant to call in Shortstop Hillis Layne, who is now hitting .380 for the Washington-owned Chattanooga club. Chattanooga is on the fringe of the first division in the Southern Association, and Griffith does not want to hamper their chances of figuring in the playoff.

Charles Scores TKO Over Gilbert

Cincinnati, July 21 (AP).—Ezzard Charles, seeking a return bout with Ken Overlin of Washington, scored a technical knockout over Al Gilbert of New York in the sixth round of a scheduled 10-round fight here tonight. Charles weighed 162, Gilbert 159.

The Cincinnati Negro had inflicted a bloody nose and lip cut on Gilbert when the referee stopped the fight. It was Charles' twenty-third victory in 24 starts and his first bout since losing to Overlin on a decision several weeks ago.

AN EXPENSIVE DEATH WATCH

Under the terms of a bill being served up to Congress, the District Boxing Commissioners will be paid $3,000 annually for their services, and echo answers "what services?" Boxing in Washington is as moribund as King Tut and the Commissioners seem to be wanting pay for keeping the death watch.

POVICH

Just what the current commission has contributed to boxing in Washington is a bit vague. They ordered tidy little labels bearing their special ringside seats at Turner's Arena and thus dispelled a bit of confusion on fight night, but that act is scarcely worth $3,000 a year. There is no quarrel with the commissioners' honesty, either. On the night when they demanded 70 passes calling for most of Griffith Stadium's 80 front-row seats, they dutifully paid the Government tax on their fistful of free ducats.

Otherwise the District Commission hasn't given boxing much of a lift here. They upped commission's "take" of the gate from 5 per cent to 10 per cent at a time when promoters were starving and the commission had a surplus in its treasury. They tried to muscle in on Joe Louis' training camp for a 10 per cent cut of the receipts until they discovered that there was no law covering any such intrusion.

Commission Batting .000

It may not be a bad idea to pay the District Boxing Commissioners $3,000 a year—and then hire some $3,000-a-year commissioners. The only gent in the Boxing Commission office who knows how to cope with the double-talking, angle-pulling fenaglers who infest the boxing racket is Secretary Dick O'Brien and he doesn't have a vote.

The commission has bungled the only two important fights the District has had in a couple of years by breaking the rules they were supposed to guard zealously. They tossed into the ashcan their own rule forbidding visiting referees and invited Benny Leonard and Arthur Donovan to officiate at the Joey Archibald-Harry Jeffra and the Joe Louis-Buddy Baer bouts. Both were botched by weaseling visiting referees when thoroughly competent Washington referees were within reach.

The commission salaries are supposed to be paid out of the commission's "take" of the bouts staged here, and to get enough money in the till the commissioners are ready to scrap another rule that was supposed to safeguard Washington boxing. Knowing they have hamstrung local promoters to the point where the commission's "take" is very meager indeed, the three good men and true now want authority to issue licenses to out-of-town promoters over whom they would have little control.

Regard Mike Jacobs Wistfully

They're hitching their salary ambitions to Mike Jacobs' wagon, of course. Jacobs' bouts mean big dough for the commission, and the wherewithal to pay their salaries, but Jacobs seems to be in no hurry to return to Washington. The Buddy Baer-Abe Simon bout, if staged here, would have fixed the commission up nicely, but Jacobs wouldn't even toss the D. C. Commission that sop. He has scheduled the bout for New York.

At the beginning, the District Commission was supposed to be a nonpolitical, civic agency . . . that's why it was specifically written in the bill legalizing boxing that they were to draw no salaries. The idea was to install as commissioners upstanding men of the community who would administer the sport out of pure interest in it. But if each commissionership is to be a salaried job at $3,000 a year, it will certainly cease to be nonpolitical, and it will be time to appoint some pros to the job, not the innocents who don't know the language of the fight mob.

Better still, give the job to Dick O'Brien and pay him the entire $9,000 that the bill provides for the commissioners. Let the commissionerships be honorary, let them maintain their private ringside seats and let them have gilded labels on their chairs, if necessary, but let the commission's work be done by a pro like O'Brien who can visualize a bad fight or a silly rule.

If there is any remaining trace of doubt that the commissioners are very unsmart indeed, they seem out to prove it in their attempt to gain control also of professional wrestling in the District. If they have ever griped that their job of supervising boxing is a headache, wait until they tangle with wrestling. Boxing is all sweetness and light compared to the double-dealing and hippodroming of the wrestling gentlemen and when the commission is asking for authority to take over wrestling they are going to great trouble to invite trouble, as smart people don't do.

Midget Derby Expected To Draw 10,000 Fans

Twenty-four Drivers Vie for $2,500 In Prizes at West Lanham Speedway

Some 10,000 persons are expected to turn out at the West Lanham, Md., Speedway tonight when the annual Atlantic States Midget Automobile Championship Racing Derby is featured in conjunction with six other events at 8:30 o'clock.

Twenty-four of the Nation's greatest drivers and fastest cars have been enrolled tonight and will compete for $2,500 in prize money and the huge and handsome trophy to be awarded the championship winner by Tom O'Donnell, popular sports fan.

Little automobiles of every make and description will compete tonight in the 40-lap (or 10-mile) championship grind. It was announced late yesterday that Johnny Peterson, Great Neck (Long Island) speed king, has been forced to withdraw from tonight's field because of a damaged motor, but that Len Golen, Wilmington (Del.) standout, and Al Duffy, a Brooklyn (N. Y.) speed specialist, will be replacements. Ted Tappett, combination auto and aviation expert, and Bud Mitchell, an up-and-coming youngster with unusual ability, also will be included in the starting field.

Ernie Gesell, winner of the last two feature races and author of three track records at West Lanham within the past two weeks, will be tested by the fine field:

Bronco Bill Schindler, the one-legged favorite who has been burning up Eastern raceways since acquiring a new motor recently and who beat out Gesell in the Cedarhurst, Long Island, feature race last Saturday night, will be numbered among those to challenge handsome Ernie's supremacy.

Other drivers scheduled to race tonight include Andy DeVercelli, Bill Troutwine, Bill Baker, Len Duncan, Mike Joseph, Jim Forte, Lyle Dickey, Walt Walker, Henry Steiger, Johnny Ringer, Rex Records, Earl Johns, Andy Furci, Joe Sheppard, Len Arnold, Bob Lang, Burnell Seaman and Henry Pierson.

There will be no advance in prices and tickets will remain on sale at the Standard Capitol Servicenter until 6 o'clock this afternoon, after which the sale shifts to the Speedway.

Staggering Dodgers' Lead Cut to One Game as Pirates Win

Pittsburgh Beats Flock With Ease

Brooklyn Loses 4th In 5 Games; Cards Draw Close in Race For National Pennant

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, July 21.—The faltering Brooklyn Dodgers were walloped again today by the Pittsburgh Pirates, 8 to 3, and lost another half game of their National League lead.

In the only game of the day in the major leagues, the Dodgers were held in check effectively, if not impressively, by Lefty Ken Heintzelman and absorbed their fourth licking in five games. As a result they headed out on another Western invasion tonight with a slender one-game lead over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Heintzelman was tapped for 10 hits, but he managed to keep the damage to a minimum while his teammates raided four Brooklyn pitchers for 11 safeties, including home runs by Elbie Fletcher and Vince DiMaggio.

Pirates Attack Kimball

Pittsburgh waded into Newt Kimball in the third for three runs on a walk, a single by Lee Handley, a triple by Arky Vaughan and a double by Bob Elliott. Vito Tamulis was rushed in and gave two passes and then Mace Brown was summoned to retire his former teammates with the bases loaded.

In the fifth, Elliott singled and Elbie Fletcher smashed a home run, his ninth of the year, over the right-field scoreboard. In the sixth a walk, a hit batsman and a single by Maurice Van Robays added another tally off Brown, and in the ninth Di Maggio clouted his eleventh round-tripper of the year after Van Robays had singled off Kemp Wicker.

Brooklyn scored in the second inning on singles by Harry Lavagetto and Peewee Reese and a double by Mickey Owen, on which Reese was nailed at the plate trying to follow Lavagetto home. An error by Vaughan and singles by Pete Reiser and Lavagetto brought another tally in the third, and in the sixth Reese singled and Owen doubled for a final run.

National Swim Record Set In Meet Here

Norma Stretch, the strawberry blonde aquatic ace from the Penn Athletic Club, turned in the thrill performance of the annual swimming meet at East Potomac Pool last night when she clipped nearly five seconds from the women's junior national 880-yard free style record. This was Miss Stretch's first national title, and she stroked the 16-lap course in 12:49.6. The former mark was 12:54.3.

Swimming her third race of the season in a comeback after an illness that kept her idle last year, the durable Norma jumped into a lead at the start and held it. She was clocked at 6:13 at the halfway mark, and was leading by almost a pool length when she turned into the final lap. In the last pool length of the race the Penn A. C. champ really turned on the steam and was churning the water like one of Mr. Knox's new destroyers as she hit the finish mark. Patsy Palmer, of Shoreham, nosed out the highly favored Ruby Hudson for second place, and Helen Flett, also of Shoreham, took fourth.

Chambers Disqualified

The fans were disappointed at the disqualification of Mickey Chambers, of Baltimore, who was considered a favorite in the race. Mickey eliminated herself, however, when she annexed the junior national championship 50-meter free style in a Pennsylvania meet last Friday night.

By way of anticlimax, three pool records were lowered in last night's meet. George Bloome, of the Lakewood Club, Baltimore, set this fashion when he knocked three-tenths of a second off the 100-meter back stroke mark which Ernie Boggs established in 1937.

McAdoo Sets Record

In the 100-meter free style, chunky Howard McAdoo, the soldier from Fort Belvoir who swims for the Airport Pool, ruined Max Rote's old record when he toured the century in 1:04.6. Five of the six natators who gained the final heat in this event cracked the former mark.

On the distaff side, Mickey Chambers, the junior national 50-meter free style champ, set a new pool

Washington Heavy Pounds Out Decision in Eight Rounds in Feature of Turner Testimonial

By Tony Neri

Getting stronger as the fight progressed, Jimmy DeChard, Washington's good-looking heavyweight prospect, scored an unanimous eight-round decision over Joe Carilli, of Hartford, Conn., last night in the feature bout of a testimonial card honoring Joe Turner, local promoter, at Griffith Stadium.

A crowd of 2,300 witnessed the program. The gate was $2,567.

Likes Longer Distance

It was the first time that DeChard had been asked to go eight rounds and his performance showed he liked the longer distance.

In that last round, Jimmy landed the hardest blow of the grueling fight, a long, looping right which buckled Carilli's knees.

On The Post score sheet, Dechard was given the last five rounds. The first three were taken by Carilli. The seventh was very close, but DeChard held a slight edge.

DeChard Hangs On

Carilli's long lefts and rights stung the Washington boy in the early rounds. In the second, the Hartford heavyweight swarmed all over DeChard, forcing him into a neutral corner. Carilli landed three straight hard rights in this round and DeChard eagerly fell into a clinch.

It was in the third round that Carilli staggered the Northeast boy with a right flush on the chin. Jimmy recovered quickly and then the pair stood toe to toe, flailing away at each other. Joe's punishing blows were playing a staccato on DeChard's face and body.

The local fighter took the lead away from his opponent in the following round and continued to take command in the remaining stanzas. With a steady pace of lefts, DeChard maneuvered Carilli around to get clean shots with his powerful right hand.

Turner Is Feted

Before the main event Turner was presented with a traveling bag, a fancy clock, and a scroll bearing the names of many of Joe's admirers. Jimmy Lake said a few kind words over the amplifier, as did Clark Griffith, president of the Washington Baseball Club, and Claude W. Owen, chairman of the District Boxing Commission.

There was an understanding that the commission was only going to take $80 from the gate of the show. That amount being the minimum the ring body can collect.

The eight-round preliminary fight between Joey Spangler, of Richmond, and Freddie Crabal, of Cambridge, Mass., was a crowd pleaser. Crabal survived a late flurry of punches by the Richmond veteran to take the decision.

Crabal's crouching style baffled Spangler in the early rounds. But in the seventh and eighth the Richmond fighter had Crabal groggy. The young Cambridge boy showed a potent left hand. Spangler weighed 154½ and Crabal came in at 149½.

The program opened with a four-round draw between Jackie Cranford, 161½, of Washington, and Baltimore's Stoney Jackson, 165½.

Two wrestling matches were staged as added attractions. In the first bout Maurice LaChappelle pinned Jim Austeri and in the other Abie Coleman disposed of Angelo Leone.

Megaw Will Sub For Ollie Pacini In Duckpin Match

With Frank "Bub" Guethler teaming up with Walter Megaw instead of Ollie Pacini, who is on vacation, the doubles match between them and Milton Walker and Frank Mischou, G. P. O. stars, will go into its last stage tonight at Queen Pin when the second block of five games will be rolled for the benefit of the U. S. O. fund.

Megaw and Guethler will go into the match tonight 65 pins up, the score for the first block being 1,221 to 1,156, but the G. P. O. pair vow that the finish will show them on top. Last week's match drew several hundred spectators and arrangements have been made for an even larger crowd tonight when Arthur "Dutch" Shaffer, former president of the Southeastern Businessmen's Association, rolls out the first ball. The match will start promptly at 8 o'clock tonight.

Belair Opens for Annual Ten Days of Racing Tomorrow

Steeplechase Events Are On Schedule

Post Time 2 P. M.; Martinez Leading Hagerstown Jockey; Scocca, Kirk Tied

Bel Air, where a ramshackle half-mile track has been parlayed into a modern three-quarter mile plant by G. Ray Bryson and his associates, opens for ten days of business tomorrow. Although the youngest member of Maryland's summer turf circuit, the Harford County track has leaped far ahead of the field, in the last few years, and as a money maker is running right up on the heels of the Maryland milers.

Bryson Co. pulled Bel Air out of the half-mile class two years ago by enlarging the running surface and now have branched out with a new clubhouse as well as a larger grandstand. Bel Air, as was the case at Hagerstown, will not lack good horses. In fact, many of the stables which competed at Delaware Park have been resting with the crack at the Bel Air cash as their objective.

Windows Are Added

With Charles Town and Hagerstown meetings showing increased crowds and betting, there is every reason to believe that Bel Air will go over the top with a bang. Mutuel Manager Walter McConnell has added 15 selling windows in anticipation of increased business. The daily double, as usual at Maryland tracks, will be on the first and second races. Post time for the first event has been set at 2 p. m. with the daily double windows closing at 1:45 p. m.

Due to the fact that the Bel Airoval is 74 feet wide, ten horses will be allowed to start in flat races. As usual, there will no limit to steeplechase fields. The jumping course has been improved and Racing Secretary Eddie Brennan has planned for one timber-topping event on each program. However, if there is not a steeplechase, the cards will have eight flat races.

Martinez Top Rider

A. F. Martinez, the Cuban rider who once performed for the Denemark Stable, was the leading jockey at the Hagerstown meeting. He nosed out Danny Scocca, of Washington, and Carson Kirk, of Silver Spring, Md., who were tied for second. Martinez carried off the honors on the closing day of the meeting, riding three winners to bring his total successes to ten. The Cuban also turned in eight seconds and ten thirds.

Scocca rode nine winners, ten seconds and seven thirds while Kirk turned in nine winners, eight seconds and five thirds. Both Scocca and Kirk have shown marked improvement in their riding during the current season.

Steffes Hurls Fifth Softball No-Hitter

Harold Steffes pitched his fifth no-hitter of the 1941 season yesterday when Fat Boy Restaurant outclassed Middle Atlantic Motors, 16-1, in a Sherwood League game which gave the winners a tighter grip on first place. Only two men reached first base, both on walks. Steffes fanned 13 in the battle at Washington Softball Stadium.

Jack Trench hit safely for the sixth consecutive time at bat until he was stopped in the eighth inning.

Cards Send Rochester Young Outfield Star

Springfield, Mo., July 21 (AP).—Stanley Musical, 20-year-old Springfield Cardinal outfielder, who is leading the Western Association in batting, home runs and runs batted in, was recalled today by Columbus of the American Association and immediately transferred to Rochester of the International League.

Motors vs. Matos

Village Motors will meet the Matos A. C. in a Washington-Virginia League game tonight at 8 o'clock in the Ballston Stadium.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, July 21.—Old Satchel Paige, the greatest figure in the history of Negro baseball, lay groaning on the rubber table in the visitors' locker room at the Yankee Stadium. He had been hit on his long blacksnake of a right arm, while batting in the fifth inning of a game between the Kansas City Monarchs and the Cuban Stars. He had allowed only one hit.

CONSIDINE

The colored doctor pressed the lumps of ice to the bandage on Satchel's arm, and when he did old Satch bared his teeth in pain. The four gold teeth shone brightly in his mouth. His weird eight-hair pompadour stood up stiffly above his flattened black Brill-o hair, like a caricature of a frightened man. His fat upper lip curled in anguish to such a degree that it almost hid his thin black mustache, and his great flat feet twitched at the other end of the long table.

The doctor murmured something about a "ruptured blood vessel beneath the primary tissue near the origin of the muscular action of the forearm." But neither old Satch nor the occasional teammate who came over and stood staring down at him would accept that diagnosis. "Satch got whipped on the crazy bone," one said to another.

After a while Satch sat up abruptly. He took a crumpled pack of cigarettes out of the pocket of his dirty baseball uniform. Curiously, he tore off about half the cigarette, as if he were dividing it with a friend, threw away one-half and lighted the tangled remains. Then he glared around the room, until the players were silent, and he began to curse. His voice rose and rose and he began packing more syllables into his cuss words. Then he stopped, tossed away the cigarette and told us why he was cursing.

"Me gettin 'hurt like this is all the fault of fellows who don't want to follow me in the box. I said I wanted to stop after the fourth today, but no, they said, everybody was sick. Too sick to pitch after I pitched. 'Fraid to go into the box after me because they'd look bad. They couldn't a'gotten away with that when I was with the Pittsburgh Crawfords. We had order there . . . so that's why I hurt now."

Satch lighted another mangled cigarette and calmed down. His dapper white manager, J. L. Wilkerson, a veteran Kansas City promoter, bustled into the room, inquired about the arm, looked worried, and bustled out. The players in the room, silenced by the great man's wrath, went back to their chuckling and bantering. Old Satch relaxed and began talking about himself.

"I can't even guess how many games I pitched," the 33-year-old Stephen-Fetchit-like pitcher said in answer to a question. "I been making my living from the game since I was 15-16. One of them fellows who didn't want to follow me today, and made me pitch another inning, he ain't pitched for fo' days. Man, I ain't had fo' days' rest since I been playing baseball. I figger I pitch in about a hunnert and twenty-five games a year—summer and winter."

This was the first time Satch had ever been hit, though he probably has batted against more wild pitchers than any man in history. "But I've had so' arms before," he said. "Plenty of them. But I never do nothing about them. We don't carry no trainer with us, nobody to baby us like them big league fellers get. We rub each other's arms when they're so', and pour hot water on so' arms. So'est arm I ever had, I just took three days off from pitchin' and walked around town. At night I poured hot water on it, and it got okay. We don't get no babying. We work, drive in a car all night, and work the next day. And play more baseball in two days than those big league fellows play in a month."

Satch is an easy-going soul, but when he talks about the white big leaguers his voice gets a little bitter. Five years ago, from all reports, he was good enough to make any big league team, for then he had a world of stuff. Today it is doubtful if he could make the grade, but old Satch doesn't quite agree.

"If the Jim Crow law in baseball say no colored boys playing on white teams, I think they ought to be a full colored team in each big league," Satch said, very seriously. "Don't think they wouldn't show those boys some baseball, too. We could 'get up one great team. I know for sure. For pitchers we'd have Impo Barnhill, of the Cubans; Chet Brewer, of Philadelphia; Roy Potlow, of Homestead Grays; Ted Cornelius, of the Chicago American Giants; Leon Day, of Newark, and me. For catcher we'd have Josh Gibson, who can still handle a piece of lumber better than a lumber yard man. In the infield we'd have Buck Leonard, of the Homesteads, on first; Dick Seay, of the Black Yankees, on second—nobody's a better second-baseman than Dick; Willie Wells on short and Roy Dandridge on third.

"In the outfield we'd have Wild Bill Wright, Ted Strong and Cool Poppa, the man who can really go and get them no matter where they hit." Cool Poppa turned out to be Jimmy Bell, a colored player now appearing in Mexico with Gibson and other stars. "I'd be in Mexico right now," Paige said, looking glumly at his bandaged arm, "but they couldn't meet old Satch's price."

After a while they came to take old Satch to a hospital for an X-ray. He hated to go, but after a while he did, the limp, black arm that is his meal ticket dangling at his side.

Reds Vernon, Thomas Head Amateur Card

With Buddy Thomas and Reds Vernon cast in the role of headliners, the District A. A. U. will present the second in a series of amateur ring shows aimed at reviving interest in the sport next Monday night at Turner's Arena. The bout tops a program of 12 battles.

Bill Blake, who is handling arrangements for the show, has announced that black cowhide leather bags will be awarded the winners while runners-up will receive military comb and brush sets. The radios and boxing shoes given boys who participated in the first show made such a hit Blake has been besieged with requests for places on future programs from amateurs as far away as New York.

The Thomas-Vernon argument is a natural in every respect. Vernon holds the Golden Gloves lightweight title and Thomas the A. A. U. crown in this balliwick, and fans have been clamoring to see the two in the same ring since early last winter.

With the assistance of the various ring coaches supporting the A. A. U.'s move to increase interest in boxing, Blake has arranged an attractive program for his second offering. Red Shield, St. Mary's of Alexandria, Apollo A. C. and Merrick club scrappers dominate the card.

The complete card:

Banny Rodill (Red Shield) vs. Joe Petro (Apollo), Houston Anderson (N. T. S.) vs. Francis (Kid) Smith (St. Mary's), John Curling (St. Mary's) vs. Ray Cleveland (Merrick), Bernie Mason (Merrick) vs. Preston Drew (Apollo), Ray Buell (Police Boys Club) vs. Bill Cross (Red Shield), Larry Baldwin (St. Mary's) vs. Billy Francis (Red Shield), Leo Marcupolis (Police Boys Club) vs. Charlie Petro (Apollo), Al Edick (St. Mary's) vs. Alex Chanaka (Red Shield). Ten-minute intermission. Alan Shreve (Police Boys Club) vs. Tom Holland (Red Shield), Johnny Smerick (Apollo) vs. Reno Workman (St. Mary's), Danny Petro (Apollo) vs. Buddy Proctor (unattached), Walter (Buddy) Thomas (unattached) vs. Buddy (Reds) Vernon (Police Boys Club).

Millner Signs With Redskins; 39 Now in Fold

The Washington Redskins announced yesterday the signing of Wayne Millner, veteran end, to a 1941 contract.

Millner is the thirty-ninth player to agree to terms, and will be starting his fifth year with the Redskins. An All-American at Notre Dame, Millner has been a standout player from the start. Fast and aggressive, he is an ideally built end for the pro circuit.

Millner scored three touchdowns last year and generally had one of his best seasons. Along with Bob Masterson, Bob McChesney and seven rookies or draftees, Millner will head for the San Diego training base on August 14. Training starts on Sunday, August 17.

Charlie Malone, who will be playing his eighth year with the Redskins, is the only unsigned end.

Rockingham Goes All Out For Defense

By the Associated Press

Salem, N. H., July 21.—More than 8,000 pieces of aluminum goods, battered pots and pans and discarded automobile parts, were collected at the gates today when a crowd of 12,000 poured inside for the opening program of Rockingham Park's 18-day summer horse race meeting.

General Manager Lou Smith, who sacrificed most of his track's opening day gate receipts to aid the national defense aluminum drive, also parted with several of his most cherished racing mementoes, a collection of aluminum racing shoes worn by famous thoroughbreds.

The feature event of the ninth opening of this oldest of New England tracks was the six furlongs Aluminum Defense Purse, captured by Stuart and Rutchick's Watch Over in the splendid time of 1:12. That Victor had about three lengths over J. W. Y. Martin's Abrasion and the Tall Tree Stable's Bill Farnsworth showed in the seven-horse field.

Watch Over, ridden by Walter Lee Taylor, who booted home the high total of 62 winners during the recent 60-day meeting at Suffolk Downs, returned $4.20, $2.80 and $2.20. Abrasion's prices were $4.40 and $2.80 and Bill Farnsworth paid $2.40 for show.

W. B. Yeager Made Head of Int. Utilities

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—William B. Yeager, 31-year-old vice president of International Utilities Corporation today was elected president of the $61,000,000 holding and investment company.

P. M. Chandler resigned as president, chairman of the board and a director in the corporation, retaining the presidency of General Water, Gas & Electric Co.

The action by the board of directors was described as the initial step in effecting a general reorganization of I. U. C. affairs.

Yeager announced his immediate objective would be to lower by 30 per cent operating costs of International and its subsidiaries, General Water, Gas & Electric and Dominion Gas & Electric Co.

"The new management has already drawn up a program of rigid economy which is designed to achieve that result and which will be immediately put into effect," he declared.

Chandler said his resignation was "in the sincere belief that my action is the best method of restoring harmony within the corporation and among its stockholders."

Last Wednesday the Securities and Exchange Commission instituted proceedings under the holding company act to make the corporation simplify its capital set-up and redistribute voting power on an equitable basis." A hearing was ordered for August 6.

In the spring of 1940 the company filed an application with the SEC for a recapitalization under section 11 (G) of the holding company act. In the 1940 annual report, however, directors said there should be some modification of the plan, adding that changes "would be determined upon when more stable conditions prevail."

Yeager, a Virginian and graduate of George Washington University, before entering the utility field held posts in the State Department and with the RFC as a special assistant to Jesse Jones.

Australian Trade Mission to Seek Compact With U. S.

Sydney, Australia, July 21 (AP).—An Australian government mission will leave shortly for the United States for important economic negotiations, including matters of tariff and shipping problems and the disposal of Australian surpluses, informed sources said today.

The delegation will carry on further negotiations already considerably advanced by the Australian Minister in Washington, Richard G. Casey, it was said.

It will investigate the possibility of obtaining tankers for importing gasoline and discuss United States wool imports, it was asserted.

E. McCarthy, assistant secretary of the customs department of the commonwealth, will head the mission.

The informants said also that the Canadian government had been consulted in making plans for the mission and pointed out that C. J. Burchell, Canadian high commissioner to Australia, who is returning to Canada to take a war work post, would advise his government concerning them.

Barnsdall Sells 102 Wells to Stanolind

New York, July 21 (AP).—D. R. Snow, vice president of Barnsdall Oil Co., said today the company has sold, subject to further examination of titles, 102 producing oil wells in west Texas to the Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., for $5,000,000.

The deal is one of the biggest outright sales of oil properties ever made in west Texas.

The sale includes 3,000 acres of leases on which the wells are located. Daily average gross production of the wells averages 2,500 barrels, with a net working interest of about 2,200 barrels daily.

Malt Liquor Output Increases in June

By the Associated Press

The Internal Revenue Bureau reports that 6,055,401 barrels of fermented malt liquors were produced during June, representing an increase of 458,339 barrels over June, 1940. (A barrel is 31 gallons).

Withdrawals for use during June totaled 5,618,359 barrels, leaving stocks of 9,005,785 at the end of the month. This was 13,568 barrels less than on the same date last year.

Fractional Increase Seen in Steel Rate

New York, July 21 (AP).—Steel mill operations for this week today were estimated by the American Iron & Steel Institute at 97.9 per cent of capacity compared with 91.2 per cent last week.

A month ago operations averaged 96.9 per cent, highest recorded so far, and a year ago the industry operated at 88.2 per cent.

Rails and Steels Lead as Stocks Advance $1 to $3 a Share; Many at New 1941 Highs

New York, July 21.—Heavy buying in today's stock market was touched off by a last-minte burst of strength in rails and steels and leading issues spurted 1 to 3 points, many to new 1941 highs.

The list had been doing well throughout the session, but the climb attained real speed in the final 15 minutes and the ticker tape was going fast as the closing gong sounded. Nearly half the day's volume was registered in the last hour.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks finished at its best of the day, up 0.8 of a point at 44.2, largest upturn since July 7. At this level the composite was within 0.8 of a point of its peak mark for the year attained in January. Transfers of 905,880 shares compared with 423,800 last Friday and were the largest since July 9.

The belated bidding race was attributed by brokers partly to the fact the rail average broke through the resistance area which it had failed to negotiate in the recent four successive weekly advances of the market as a whole. This, it was said, brought in buying from chartists and tenchnicians who had been waiting for the "confirmation" to get aboard.

In addition to a little touch of inflationary psychology bulls had the benefit of continued bright business indications which some thought might enable corporations to offset mounting taxes and spreading governmental controls. Mild cheer was derived from war bulletins reviving hope the Russians were stemming the Nazi thrust.

Carriers were buoyed by predictions railway net operating income in the third quarter possibly would reach $100,000,000 monthly, thus putting some roads in line to maintain or resume dividends. An increase in this week's mill operations aided steels.

Among stocks stepping into new high territory for the year were Santa Fe, Southern Railway, Atlantic Coast Line, Western Union, Standard Oil (N. J.), Texas Corporation, Socony, Savage Arms, Goodrich, J. I. Case and International Harvester.

Also prominent on the upturn were United States Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet, Crucible Steel, United States Rubber, Pepsi-Cola, International Paper, Montgomery Ward, Anaconda, Westinghouse, du Pont, United Aircraft and American Airlines.

Motors, under water most of the time on the outlook for a 50 per cent cut in 1942 model production, recovered somewhat at the last.

Well ahead in the Curb were Gulf Oil, Humble Oil, McWilliams Dredging, Bell Aircraft and Glen Alden Coal. Turnover here was around 114,000 shares versus 71,000 in the previous full session.

Railroad bonds forged ahead to more than a point today in active trading that sent many issues to new 1941 highs. The general market maintained a slightly higher trend.

The Associated Press average of 20 rails rose 0.4 of a point to 64.7 and the 10 utilities edged into a new 1941 high at 101.9. Volume of $7,914,000, par value, compared with $5,182,000 last Friday. Several medium-priced rails changed hands in excess of $200,000 each.

Among the better performers were Baltimore & Ohio convertibles of '60 at 32⅛, Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s at 54¼, St. Louis-San Francisco 4½s at 16, Missouri-Kansas-Texas 5s at 30, St. Paul 5s at 12½, Commercial Mackay income 4s at 52¾, Southern Pacific 4½s at 52¾, Nickel Plate 4½s at 63¾, Consolidated Edison 3½s at 107⅛ and Pacific Gas 3¾s at 111⅝.

United States Governments were inactive in the Stock Exchange, but retained a steady undertone. A better demand lifted a few Treasuries in the outside market minor fractions.

Trailer Tanker May Relieve Ship Shortage

By the Associated Press

Duncan, Okla., July 21.—Erle P. Halliburton, president of an oil well cementing firm, believes he has the answer to the crude oil transportation shortage in a trailer type oil tanker to be towed by merchant ships.

Halliburton, who said tests of models are being made at the Stephens Institute, New York, has submitted the idea to Oil Administrator Ickes.

"The tankers are a unique, novel design of a barge that can be constructed very rapidly," he said. "They require about half the amount of steel in tankers of equal capacity."

At Oklahoma City, Gov. Leon C. Phillips declared the tanker barges could transport enough oil to obviate the necessity for construction of a propsed pipeline from east Texas to New Jersey refineries. He accompanied Halliburton to Washington last week.

Hercules Powder Production Leaps 900% in Year

Wilmington, Del., July 21 (AP).—Hercules Powder Co. announced today its smokeless powder production had increased 900 per cent over that of a year ago and was ahead of national defense schedules.

"When the additional facilities under construction are completed in late summer or early autumn, our smokeless powder production capacity will have doubled again," Charles A. Higgins, president of the company, said in his report.

Hercules' net earnings for the six months ended June 30 were $2,831,189 after Federal taxes of $4,715,742 and were equal to $1.95 a share on common stock after preferred dividends. This compared with $3,293,065, or $2.30 a common share in the first half of 1940.

June quarter net profit was $1,470,763 or $1.02 a common share, against $1,360,426 or 93 cents a share for the March quarter.

Higgins said the number of Hercules employes had increased 50 per cent in the past year, in addition to workmen engaged in building ordnance facilities representing plant investments of $75,000,000, an amount he said was greater than that of all of the company's own plants combined.

First 'Extra Load' Tanker Ends Trip

New York, July 21 (AP).—Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. announced today the first "extra load" tanker, with 108,000 barrels of gasoline instead of the 104,000 barrels it formerly was permitted to carry, had arrived at Paulsboro, N. J., from the Gulf Coast.

Increased tanker loads are permitted under a revision of the Federal load-line law.

Federal officials estimate the change to bigger loads will mean an average daily increase of 30,000 to 40,000 barrels of petroleum products delivered to the East Coast.

Factory Employment Up 8% In Virginia Under Defense Spur

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., July 21.—Employment trends are reflecting clearly the defense program expenditures in Virginia, the Unemployment Compensation Commission reported today.

A comparison of pay roll figures n March 31 with those at the beginning of the year showed increases of varying importance in all industry groups except construction and trade, UCC Chairman Edwin S. Reid said. Completion or near completion of major emergency defense construction projects was held responsible for the drop in construction pay rolls, while the trade employment decline was considered normal for this season of the year.

A rise of 8 per cent in manufacturing employment as a whole was recorded as compared with December 31. Leather products, shipbuilding, machinery, chemicals and finished textile goods showed gains ranging from 10 to 18 per cent in the 9-day period.

Howewver, the largest gain of 22 per cent was registered in tobacco manufacturing, a non-defense industry. The textile mill products industry which employs the greatest number of manufacturing workers, showed a 6 per cent rise by March 31.

Only 5 of the 20 different manufacturing industries in the State decreased their pay rolls over the period. Small declines were noted in the food products and printing-publishing industries and also in the less important rubber products, electrical machinery and petroleum and coal products groups. The largest decrease among manufacturing concerns was in automobiles, which dropped 8 per cent.

Expansion of services to accommodate the industrial pickup brought about a 11 per cent rise in employment in the telephone and telegraph group and a 9 per cent jump in electric light and power. In the transportation group the water transportation industry pay rolls rose 16 per cent.

Pay rolls in the general building classification jumped 57 per cent from December to January, when th econstruction of big projects at Camp Lee, Fort Eustis, Fort Belvoir and Radford was at a peak. Between January 31 and the close of March a 43 per cent drop occurred. Employment on March 31 was 11 per cent below the December figure.

Coal mining employment registered a 2 per cent rise by March 31. The nonmetallic mining and quarrying industry rose 13 per cent above December.

Bank Loans Up 55 Million During Week

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that banks in 101 leading cities had increased their commercial, industrial and agricultural loans by $55,000,000, to a total $5,988,000,000, in the week ended July 16.

The principal increases were $17,000,000 in New York City and $13,000,000 in the Chicago Federal Reserve district.

The total of business loans, which have been rising steadily as a result of the defense program, was $1,524,000,000 higher than a year ago.

The board's 101-city member bank condition statement gave the following summary of assets and liabilities on July 16 together with changes from the previous week and from the corresponding week last year, in millions of dollars:

The board also reported that check transaction picked up again last week as a result of midmonth business.

In 274 leading cities, bank debits in the week ended July 16 totaled $10,616,000,000 compared with $8,476,000,000 in the preceding week, which represented a severe slump from the holiday swollen week before that when $12,585,000,000 of checks were cashed. Business Highlights

By Standard & Poor's Corp.

Sharp Rise in Carloadings

Stimulated by the early movement of grain and a heavy contra-seasonal increase in coal shipments, carloadings have jumped to the highest level in 11 years. For these reasons, increases in carloadings this summer and fall probably will be less than normal, although they should reach a peak of 950,000 or better. "Miscellaneous" freight traffic, which consists mainly of heavy industrial products, should continue to show marked gains over comparable 1940 periods.

June Freight Car Orders

The 29,799 freight cars the United States railroads ordered in June made the largest total for any June on a record which goes back to 1918, and the largest for any month since March, 1924. The 141,209 cars ordered in the 12 months ended June 30 exceeded those bought in any calendar year since 1924. In addition, the railroads ordered 140 locomotives in June, bringing the first half total to 656, or more than three times the 204 ordered in the first half of 1940.

Wheat Storage Plan

The railroads as well as the farmers are keeping a close watch on the wheat storage plan the Government is trying out at Jamestown, North Dakota. This is said to involve erection of 170 steel bins on a 10-acre plot near this town, each with a storage capacity of about 18,000 bushels. If these bins work as they are expected to, as many additional units as are required probably will be set up in the wheat areas. This obviously would increase the movement of wheat, and, hence, the traffic of the Northwest roads.

Glass Container Sales

Glass container sales in the first half of 1941 are believed to have been about 20 per cent ahead of the year before. Increased industrial activity and greater consumer purchasing power is responsible for the bulk of the sales improvement, but there was probably some stocking by customers because of the generally firming trend in container prices and the fear that deliveries might be delayed somewhat in later periods this year. These latter incentives should be no less real in coming months and may well continue to bolster sales. All told, it is probable that glass container shipments in the second half will score another good gain, although possibly not so large as that indicated for the first six months. A new record high is clearly in sight for the full year.

Virginia Bankers To Hear Riggs Aide

Richard Johnson, of the Riggs National Bank, will address a meeting of Loudoun, Fauquier and Prince William bankers at Leesburg, Va., tonight at 6:30. Mr. Johnson will speak on customer relations. The Virginia bankers are members of the Tri-County Clearing House Association.

Ceiling Boost Spurs Cotton Cloth Demand

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—Worth Street textile sources reported a heavy demand for cotton cloth but few sales today as a result of upward revision of the Federal price ceilings, explaining volume was held down because mills were reluctant to sell until they had studied the new price schedule.

Retail cloth price jumps of as much as 4 cents a yard, the equivalent of about 16 cents a pound, based on wholesale rises of 1 cent a yard, were forecast freely.

One reason given for the restricted trading was the recent sharp advance in raw cotton futures.

Mill agents pointed out that while print cloth prices were raised from 39 cents a pound to 43 cents, cotton prices had climbed from about 14¾ cents a pound on June 28, the day ceilings were put on cloth prices, to around 16½ cents. That, they said, about wiped out any advantage from ceiling revision, since 1 and 2 cent premiums are placed on certain qualities of cotton.

"Most mills are sold up for deliveries in the next few months," another trader said. "They're not going to tie themselves up way into 1942 with costs of raw materials and such increasing."

Just before the ceilings were announced, print cloth was selling from 44 to 49 cents a pound, one firm reported, estimating the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply had set maximums 10 per cent under prices current late in May.

The general comment was, however, that the new prices were close to present values.

"Just the same, we favor only orders for immediate or early delivery, and we are going to avoid selling too far ahead," one Worth Street selling agent declared.

"Cutting down on long-term contracts seems to be pretty general, and ought to prove beneficial to the business," he added.

Cotton Prices Spurt

New York, July 21 (AP).—Cotton prices swept upward in a strong buying movement based on expectation of renewed activity in cotton goods markets and belief in commodity circles Federal price officials would avoid clamping down on farm stapie values.

Spot cotton in New York led the parade, crossing 17 cents early and closing at a quotation of 17.26 cents a pound, highest since January, 1930. Futures were up $1.45 to $1.75 a bale.

Some import commodities futures, chiefly coffee, silk, sugar and cocoa, retreated. Wool tops slipped as much as ½ cent a pound. Silk was 2 to 3 cents a pound under previous levels. The Associated Press index of 35 cash wholesale commodities advnaced to 89.43 per cent of the 1926 average from 89.08 Saturday.

Bilbo Telegram Delays Action on Recreation Bill

A telegram from Senator Bilbo (Democrat), of Mississippi, yesterday canceled Senate District Committee action, scheduled for today, on the District recreation bill.

Bilbo told the committee that he wanted consideration of he measure deferred, but he didn't say why. Bilbo's office reported it did not know when the Senator would return to the Capitol from Mississippi.

The bill which would merge all play facilities in the Capital under the supervision of a citizen-dominated board, is one of nearly a dozen measures originally scheduled for action when the committee meets at 10:30 a. m. in the Capitol.

The list includes measures to create an industrial accident-prevention board and to amend the District child-labor law to permit minors to take part in legitimate plays.

Sugar Futures

New York, July 21 (AP).—An increase of 502,000 tons in 1941 quotas over the weekend depressed domestic sugar futures today and final prices were 1 to 4 points lower on sales of 28,800 tons.

World futures were firm in anticipation of larger demand and the close was 3½ to 5 points higher on sales of 23,200 tons.

Sale of 3,300 tons of Peru sugar, due in September, at 3.48 cents a pound was reported, although other raw offerings were held at 3.50 and 3.55 cents. Refined was unchanged.

Your Vacation Travel on Rails and Highways May Be Restricted Next Year, Signs Indicate

New York, July 21.—Enjoy your vacation trip this year, Joe. Gas up the buggy. Pile in the wife and both the kids. Or hop the excursion train and go up to the big town for a week.

Have fun, Joe. It's a fast moving world.

Yes, Joe—or maybe you're Tom, or Mike, maybe Tony, or Stanislaus, or Pete.

That's the boiled-down, private advice of some mighty smart men in business, government, industry, finance.

This may be the last summer for some time when you can do exactly what you please with your time off, and, if you're like most Americans, time off from the job means going places. Places may not be so easy to go to soon. Maybe sooner than you think.

Why? Well, especially if you live east of the Mississippi, north of the southermost tier of States, by next summer, maybe sooner, you may not get gasoline for fun-purposes.

The Government already has taken from the oil companies 50 tankers which formely brought crude petroleum from the fields around the Gulf Coast, where it was turned into gasoline.

This week reliable sources in the oil trade heard that the Government needed 14 more of the tank-boats in the next 30 days, a total of 50 before the year is out.

When the first 50 boats went to the U. S. Navy and Britain, oil men carried on somehow. Old pipe lines were used, in some cases their direction of flow reversed. Tankers were loaded below their plimsol lines. More tank cars were rushed into use. New pipe lines were planned—they'll take a year or more. Ships were made to run faster, turn around more quickly, make more trips per month.

Oil men were agreed the Eastern seaboard could get along without any official action to cut your gas consumption, though the Government still was not sure.

If more tankers go, and new ones the oil companies are building are taken over as fast as completed for the Navy or the battle of the Atlantic, the situation may be very different.

Oil and Gas Journal, a trade authority, said flat-footedly this week that, while it had been believed that emergency measures had offset the requisitioning of the first 50 tankers, "it is agreed the industry cannot balance its present supply and demand if another 50 tankers are removed from coastwise service over the next few months."

If you live west of the Mississippi River, you probably won't have this problem yet. But it is pointed out more tank cars needed in the East may mean fewer in the West.

Wherever you live, a cheap excursion on the train may not come your way so easily. Maybe not at all, later.

Tip-off came this week when the Association of American Railroads asked the roads of the Southeast to cut out all excursions to facilitate troop movements. No time limit was set on the request.

But this may be significant. Railroads moved 1,452,308 members of the armed forces in the first half of this year, a score of thousand carloads. Transportation men say they are informed troop movements for the balance of the year will be notably heavier. It may also prove important later, rail operating officials said, that while priorities on materials have been granted them to build more freight cars, additional passenger coaches rank merely with other civilian needs for such necessities as steel, skilled labor, electrical equipment, air brakes and the like.

Farther north along the Eastern seaboard, from Washington to the border, the principal passenger carriers report they have received no requests to curtail special vacation and excursion services, though they have already had to do so of their own accord at times when troops were moving in volume, especially when furloughs were given for holidays.

The official of one trailroad said: "We are planning special trips only from week to week, instead of for the whole vacation period. Anything can happen."

Another said: "Who can see more than a few weeks ahead at a time like this?"

Oil and automobile men say the Government realizes and is worried about the implications of a possible oil shortage in the East and the effect that a smaller supply of automobiles next year as factories are turned to tanks and planes may have on things more important than vacations.

The Automobile Manufacturers Association, working with seven State highway departments, estimated this week on the basis of surveys that more than 50 per cent of your gasoline is burned in "necessitous driving—to get you to and from the job, to make your rounds as a salesman, to take the kids to school or to bring supplies home to the farm.

These are the things the Government must go out of its way to protect, men who have studied the problem say.

And if that means cutting into vacations later, that will be just too bad.

Well, so long, Joe. Have a good trip.

Head of A.B.A. Sees Inflation As Inevitable

By the Associated Press

P. D. Houston, of Nashville, Tenn., president of the American Bankers Association, asserted after a White House call yesterday that in his opinion some inflation was inevitable.

He said he had called on President Roosevelt to discuss the program for the association's convention in Chicago from September 28 to October 2. He did not elaborate.

The inflation problem, he indicated, will not be a prime subject for discussion at the convention, and he said he had not taken it up with the Chief Executive.

In response to questioning by newsmen, however, Houston said he thought there would be some inflation, although he hoped there would be "no wild orgy of spending as in the recent past" on the part of the public.

The association president added that he would like to see people put their spare cash into defense bonds and thought banks could help combat inflation by giving careful consideration to the uses to which money is put.

He said there might be some further restriction of credit, but that any worthy application for credit would encounter no difficulties.

Burman Is Favored Over Bettinna

Dempsey's Protege Is Rated at 6-5

Fight Is Offered As Another Blow At Ring 'Monopoly' By Meehan's Outfit

By the United Press

New York, July 21.—Chick Meehan stages his second boxing show in opposition to Mike Jacobs' "monopoly" tomorrow night at Ebbets Field, featuring a ten-round bout between Heavyweights Melio Bettina and Red Burman.

Meehan, former football coach at New York University and Manhattan, expects to make money tomorrow night because he has big names on his card. He lost about $7,000 with his first show two weeks ago when he had no big-timers to trot out.

The Bettina-Burman match shapes up as a good fight, and it is supported by two other ten-round bouts in which well-known heavyweights appear: Lee Savold vs. Solly Krieger and Pat Comiskey vs. Henry Cooper.

In the feature brawn, Southpaw Bettina, of Beacon, N. Y., is trying to use Burman, of Baltimore—Jack Dempsey's protege—as a stepping stone to a winter title fight with Joe Louis. Bettina, former light-heavyweight champion, is unbeaten as a heavyweight. He defeated 23 big fellows, knocking out 17 of them. If he can add Baltimore Red to his list tomorrow night, mauling Melio then can demand another tilt with Billy Conn, whom he gave two great fights in 1939. Victory over Conn would clinch a winter match with Louis, if Bomber Joe is still champion then.

Bettina is confident he can beat Conn now—as well as Burman—because he claims he is much stronger as a heavyweight than as a light heavy. Paring down to the 175-pound limit weakened him so that he tired near the end of every fight, he explained.

Burman 6-5 Choice

However, betting men do not share Bettina's confidence. They have made Burman the favorite at 6-5. The Baltimore Irishman, scaling about 195, will have a 10-pound advantage. Moreover, Burman's bobbing and weaving style is almost as awkward for an opponent as Bettina's southpaw technique. Burman is rugged also, having been kayoed only once—by Joe Louis last January. And he is a great body puncher.

The wagering men are fearful also that Bettina may be a bit rusty because he hasn't fought since March. He ruptured a chest muscle while training and was forced to rest more than three months. Before that he put five bouts under his belt this year, including knock-out victories over Herbie Katz, Buddy Knox and Jack Marshall.

Two other heavies on tomorrow night's card also have designs on Louis—Savold, of Des Moines, and Comiskey, of Paterson, N. J., but their opponents are not as formidable as Burman.

Burman-Bettina Bout on Television

New York, July 21 (AP).—One little man who was always there will not be there tomorrow night.

South Americans will hear a ringside blow-by-blow account of the Red Burman-Melio Bettina heavyweight fight at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, but Announcer Eli Canel will be eight miles from the scene.

While other announcers are at the ringside, Canel, head of the Spanish section and chief sportscaster in Spanish for the National Broadcasting Co., will be in his Radio City office, watching the fight on a television transmitter and broadcasting by shortwave.

New Champions Crowned In Post Trophy Golf Play

Betty Nuttman, of Army and Navy, finished second to Mrs. Goodman in the Class B net competition with 102—23—79, just missing gross honors by a stroke. Mrs. Cochran Fisher, of Columbia, was the third low net victor with 111—28—83.

Ties also marked the net prize winners in Class B, including Mrs. R. D. Young, a Washington club committeeman and prize winner in the Duffers' competition, with 103—19—84; Mrs. J. B. Foy, Army and Navy, 110—26—84; Madeline Bast, Manor, a former Duffers' Trophy champion, and Mrs. J. J. Corson, Washington, with 104—20—84, including the second lowest back nine of the day, a 49. Mrs. Connolly came back in 48 for the best nine-hole effort.

Mrs. F. J. Hopkins, a newcomer to tournament golf from Kenwood, posted a 93-17, 76, which would have tied for the trophy at Manor but Mrs. Hopkins' handicap had not cleared the proper channels and had not complied with the three-month ruling on new players and her score was not official.

Mrs. Butler Thrilled

Mrs. Butler, first of the attractive new champions to finish, was thrilled with her lowest round of golf and proud that it was in competition. Her best previous competitive effort was a 96 in the Diffenbaugh trophy play at Kenwood and a 95 in an informal round.

Mrs. Butler was a Class B player until one of her best previous scores in the recent Maryland State Tournament, where she was runner-up in the fourth flight, earned a promotion to Class A. The new champion was third in Class B of The Post Cup event last year. Yesterday she played good golf, excepting four bad holes, and had only a single one-putt green. After playing the back nine first, Mrs. Butler came to the ninth hole, the eighteenth she had played, with 5 for a 92 but visited the woods twice and finished with a 7, which she feared would cost her the trophy.

Started Playing Easter

Mrs. Goodman, who took up golf at the insistence of her husband on Easter, has a promising long game and needs only a little more short game play and experience to develop among the better players. Mrs. Goodman played competitive tennis in high school and college, and was runner-up in the Northern California high school championship. She had planned to visit California this week but stayed to compete in the tournament.

The Class B trophy will remain at Washington Golf and Country Club where Mrs. Ingman Harr took it last year in its first year of play. Mrs. Butler will take the big Class A cup to Kenwood for the first time in nine years. Mrs. W. L. Weible and Merrell Whittlesey officiated at the Class A presentation ceremonies and Mrs. Frank Kramer at the Class B prize time.

Take a Boat Ride And Help Send D.C. Team to Tourney

District sandlot ball players and officials are currently pushing the ticket sale for the moonlight cruise next Tuesday, July 29, on the Wilson Line, in an effort to raise funds to send a team to the National Amateur Baseball Federation Tournament, September 4-15, in Youngstown, Ohio.

All team members of the federation, association officials and local sporting goods stores are handling the tickets.

W. P. Griffith, secretary of the local federation, attended the summer meeting last week in Youngstown and reported Pat Murphy, Heurich catcher, had been named to one of the positions on the all-star team and would receive a certificate and medal.

The five leagues holding membership in the federation are now battling for berths to the city tournament, which will start around August 15.

Miles Wins $500 Open Golf in Ohio

Youngstown, Ohio, July 21 (AP).—Diminutive Reggie Myles, Cleveland golf star, emblazoned his name in the $500 Poland Open history book today by retaining his title with a red-hot finish that topped a field of 100.

Curtailed to 27 holes instead of the scheduled 36 due to a late start and a big entry list, the tournament went to Myles with 102. He was 6 under par with rounds of 35, 35, 32—102.

The stocky champion, after failing to come out of a trap on the twenty-first hole, broke his sand wedge over his knee and proceeded to add three birdies and an eagle to a seven, clinching the title with a subpar 4 on the twenty-seventh hole.

Four players finished three strokes back in a deadlock for second—Jack Thompson, of Youngstown, 35, 37, 33—105; Rader Jewett, of Butler, Pa., 34, 36, 35—105; Frank Metzer, of Cuyahoga Falls, 36, 34, 35—105, and Sam Parks, jr., of Pittsburgh, 33, 37, 33—105.

D. C. Firemen Beat Baltimore Team, 5 to 4

The D. C. Firemen kept their undefeated record intact last night at Washington Softball Stadium, defeating Baltimore's Gas and Electric team, 5-4. Roger Sawtell, on the mound for the Firemen, was forced to quell a last ditch rally in the seventh which saw two runs cross the plate and the tying run perched on second before the side was retired. It was the first loss of the year for the Baltimore ten.

Paul Sherman, one of Baltimore's finest softball twirlers, allowed but four hits in comparison to the seven Sawtell permitted. Four of the hits, incidentally, were triples. Sherman fanned nine. A triple by Jones and a double by Mandes, each leading to two runs, featured the Firemen's attack.

In the National Night League, D. C. Aggies hung a 10-0 defeat on Evening Star.

Tonight at 8 o'clock, Garvin's Grill will meet the Capital City League leaders, Kavakos Grill, in loop play. In an exhibition tilt at 9:15 p. m., Lyle Florists, of Alexandria, leader of the Alexandria City League, will meet Clem Stralka's Service Station Redskins.

For dozens of years now the Marines have had their traditional song, "From the Halls of Montezuma." The Army Artillery have had "The Caissons Go Rolling Along." The Navy has had "Anchors Aweigh."

But what has the United United States Army Air Corps had? The answer is that they've had practically nothing musical—officially, anyhow. You might say that they were woefully lyrically unprepared.

So tonight a young gentleman, name of Lanny Ross, who sings, is doing something about so lamentable a defense deficiency. He's going to get on the radio and present a ditty which he's composed especially for the Air Corps.

It's called "Keep 'Em Flying," a title which you, no doubt, know comes as a direct quotation from the official slogan of the United States Air Corps. Mr. Ross has already officially presented the song to the Army Air Corps.

The phrase, "Keep 'Em Flying," was coined by Lieut. Col. Harold N. Gilbert, a recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross during the first World War and the only man in the country who has received a Distinguished Service Medal during the present emergency. (Meaning that he has two, if you please.)

Lieut. Col. Gilbert is to be a guest on Lanny's program—at 6:15 p. m. over WJSV and the Columbia network—to say a few words showing that being lyrical about "Keep 'Em Flying" is all right with him.

OPM Foresees Shortage Soon In Book Paper

By the Associated Press

A shortage in book, writing and some other types of paper was forecast yesterday by officials of the Office of Production Management who said also that readers may find before many months that their magazines and books have a yellowish hue.

Curtailment of supplies of chlorine, used as a bleaching agent, will result in less "brightening" in some kinds of paper, they explained.

Chlorine deliveries to manfacturers already have been cut about 10 per cent by voluntary agreement. The OPM has not imposed any mandatory restrictions, but its technicians are working with industry representatives now on plans to conserve more chlorine.

Plenty of Newsprint

Newspapers would be little affected, because not very much chlorine is used in newsprint. Also, defense officials said, Canadian newsprint production has not equaled capacity and is being increased.

There is an "acute shortage" of waste paper, it was said. About 4,500,000 tons have been collected annually for use in making reclaimed pulp but OPM officials said 6,200,000 tons should be sought this year.

Rail Shortage Foreseen

The OPM is in the process of organizing a defense advisory committee on paper and pulp. The basic producers have nominated an advisory committee, printers and publishers will select one on July 29, paper converters will name one Tuesday. From the three advisory groups, defense officials will select the industrial committee. The OPM foresees a shortage of transportation facilities for newsprint shipments.

Rail transportation is not yet seriously lacking, said C. W. Boyce, head of OPM's paper and pulp section, but is expected to become "rather serious" as rail cargo facilities become congested with defense shipments.

Draft Boards Get Master Sheets of Order Numbers

Local draft boards will receive master sheets today showing the official order number of new 21-year-old registrants as a result of the national lottery held here last week, District Selective Service headquarters announced yesterday.

As each local board receives its master sheet, it was said, it will begin integrating the new registrants into the list containing the old registrants.

Officials were unable to estimate how long this process will take, as the speed depends upon the individual local board. However, it was said, integration will proceed as quickly as possible. New registrants may inquire at their local board to determine their official standing.

New Paintings Displayed at Post

Pink, white and blue predominate in Frede Vidar's "Building the World's Fair", one of the three watercolors on exhibit in The Post's window this week, while Paul Rohland's "White Houses" has the colors its title implies, and Frederic K. Wykes' amusing "Florida Bridge" is appropriately hot and tropical in tone.

All three paintings are from the section of fine arts, Public Buildings Administration.

Lew Fields Of Comedy Fame Dies

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, July 21.—Relatives and a few close friends attended private funeral services today for Lew Fields who, with Joe Weber, made up the famous comedy team of the theater.

Fields died of pneumonia yesterday at the age of 74. Weber, his partner in more than 60 years of trouping, was at his bedside, as were the widow, Rose Fields, and two daughters, Mrs. Frances Marcus and Mrs. D. Eli Lahn.

The family and Weber took the body to its final resting place. The hour of the services was kept secret; the place of burial was withheld.

Fields, like his partner, was born in the Bowery, of Polish immigrant parents. Fields was born in January, Weber in August, 1867. By the time they were 8 they had worked up a vaudeville act. At 9 they were booked for 9 shows a day at $3.50 a week in the Chatham Square Museum.

They launched their Music Hall in 1895, dissolved their partnership in 1904, found they were not successful apart, and renewed it eight years later for the Weber and Fields Jubilee that grossed $300,000, a Broadway record at that time. For the next 20 years Weber produced and played in some shows independently, and in others Fields was with him. Both retired in 1930, but emerged from time to time, for radio broadcasts and appearances in two movies, "Blossoms of Broadway" and "Lillian Russell."

Henderson Limits Bread Price Rise to 1c a Pound

Price Administrator Leon Henderson yesterday served warning that he would not allow bread prices to rise by more than 1 cent per pound loaf. At the same time he suggested all contemplated price rises be averted in their entirety by reducing operating expenses, cutting promotion and using less-expensive wrappings.

Henderson's statement, included in letters to 250 leading bakers, conceded that costs to bakers had risen, but said that they averaged only about one-half cent per loaf and that thus "fractional increases in the selling price would be more in line with cost changes than would increases of a full cent."

Also admitting that there were "a few" localities where higher costs could not be absorbed by operating economies, Henderson nevertheless declared that "in no locality does it appear that an increase of more than 1 cent would be warranted."

The price administrator attributed the higher costs to recently enacted farm parity legislation providing loans to farmers equal to an average of 98 cents per bushel on wheat, as compared with last year's rate of 64 cents. He added that higher labor costs were also a factor in some areas.

In addition to savings possible through less promotion, cheaper wrappings and reducing the percentage of stale returns, Henderson suggested that reductions in unit costs would also derive from larger sales stimulated by "increased consumer incomes."

'Fifth Column' From U.S. Wins British Game

By Drew Middleton

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, July 21.—The British army's plan for defending air fields probably will be reviewed as a sequel to maneuvers in which a score of middle-aged business men captured the heavily-manned general headquarters of a brigade defending an important airdrome.

The feat was accomplished in fog and rain yesterday despite the presence of from 300 to 500 British troops with full equipment, including Bren guns and heavy machine-guns.

The attacking Americans were aided by "fifth columnists," including a golfer and man who simulated drunkenness. They rushed the headquarters to capture maps and secret documents and dismantled the switchboard.

Umpires estimated their losses at only ten men. The British guardians were troops from some of the oldest and most noted regiments of the empire.

Practice Golf Shots

The Americans, residents of England commanded by Gen. Wade Hampton Hayes, scouted the scene of the attack thoroughly.

The golfer made practice shots to study machine-gun emplacements. A casual stroller took a complete set of pictures of the headquarters area—this in spite of regulations strictly forbidding cameras near airdromes. A dog was used by another American operative. He tossed a stick into bushes shielding a machine-gun position. The dog chased the stick. He followed the dog. He learned which way the gun pointed.

With details of the airdrome defense complete, Hayes led "parachutists" in the attack and although the British gun defending that particular zone opened fire, most of them were officially declared to have survived to reach cover.

Armed with tommy-guns, revolvers, tear gas and hand grenades and with the rain increasing to lower visibility, the Americans rose from their positions and rushed a sentry guarding a gap in the wire. He was overpowered and ruled dead.

Seize Maps and Orders

The Americans poured through the gap, tossed tear-gas bombs through a window and knocked down a door. While half the guardsmen watched over the staff, others dashed upstairs to seize maps which they said would be invaluable in actual battle, orders and other army documents.

Some of them paunchy, they gathered to enjoy the spectacle of British officers being trussed up.

The British protested that the attack "came too early." The Americans quoted field orders showing that they attacked at the first moment permissible under regulations governing the maneuvers and said "the Germans will not wait either."

The argument was halted by word that one of the Americans' imitation explosive grenades had set the headquarters on fire. This blaze was under control when a high staff officer rolled up to find out what was wrong.

When he learned that the headquarters had been captured he praised the Americans as being "as enterprising as we can expect the Nazis to be," but ordered the maps and orders returned "so we can continue the exercise."

The Americans withdrew whistling "Yankee Doodle."
